"And there shall be signs in the stars."—Luke 21: 25. "And the stars shall fall from heaven."—Matt. 24: 29. "And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."—Rev. 6: 13.

The sun had gone down, and the dome of the night
Hung glittering with diamonds all mystic and bright;
When, "Look out at the windows!" rang forth on the air,
And the startled world's thousands awoke with a prayer;
And the nations, aroused from their midnight sleep,
Gazed smitten with awe towards the starry deep;
For Jehovah seemed kindling his forges in ire,
And the sparks in their glow had set heaven on fire;
And the old constellations seemed hurled from their thrones,
And driven in showers through the azure zones;
And the brilliant star-rockets fled fast through the sky,
Now streaming in splendor, now fading to die.
"Is it coming?" men asked, with hearts calm or in fear,
"That day long foretold in the Book—is it here?"
And the meteors in answer still flashed and burned
In the faces of men that to paleness turned.

O star of the North! if thy pillars give way,
Woe, woe to the world, 'tis the dreaded dooms-day!
But no—it remains, and the wild starry shower
But heralds the burst of that awful hour,
When the sun shall burn dim, and the spheres that sing,
Shall faint at thy coming, O King of kings.
Then 'mid whispers of ill, guilt cowed at the sight,
Till the multitude turned to earth's savants for light;
And her wise men said—pointing to secondary cause—
"Fear not, 'tis the working of Nature's grand laws."
It is well; but the seer hath it writ in the roll,
That ere heaven with loud thunders shall rend as a scroll,
The sun shall be darkened as with a black pall,
And the stars of the firmament totter and fall,
As the fig-tree, bent down by the tempest's strong arm,
Flings off its green clusters in trembling alarm.
'Tis the crisis of ages—earth's mightiest and last;
Lo, the Judge on his throne, and the harvest is past!
O the great day of doom! O the wonderful day!
When the earth and the heaven shall all pass away!

"THE FATHER LOVETH THE SON." Jno. 5: 20.

A Sermon preached by F. H. Robinson, Pastor of First Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg, Pa., and sent us by Bro. W. F. Fahnestock.

It is not strange that God should love his only begotten Son. It is the nature of a father to love his own. God has created all human fathers with a natural love, and we are but poor images of God when in our best state. The Bible is full and clear upon that point of the fatherly love of God toward us his creatures who are unworthy of love. How much more must it be true that God loves his co-equal Son, the partaker of his divine nature. How could any one doubt it, or for a moment call it in question? Why should Jesus Christ even tell us so plain, so necessary a thing as this? God could not help loving him. He was one with God. He was one infinitely lovely, the chiefest among ten thousand. There was every thing in him to love, every attraction of character. He had dwelt in his bosom from all eternity. In his compassion for the sinful race of men he had left the glories of heaven, and was engaged in the mission of human salvation. He was on his way to the cross. He was about to die for sinners.

There was every thing in Christ the Son, in his Godhead, in his humanity, in his character, in his work for man's salvation, why men, and angels, and God should love him. Why should Jesus tell us so plain and necessary a truth as this, "The Father loveth the Son"? He said it because it has to do with us as well as with himself. This is the case with all the things which are revealed in Scripture about God and Christ. The Bible is God's book for us. It is his word to us. All that is in it is for us. When it tells us anything about God, about his dealings and feelings in regard to anything or any being, it tells us because that truth in some way concerns us. When, as in the text, Jesus Christ tells us how God feels toward him, he tells us because it is something which concerns us. The great thing is to know everything that is possible to be known about Jesus Christ.

Ages ago there was a man upon the earth. He was here alone. He was here the head of the race of mankind. He stood for the race, God's one subject. He sinned and rebelled against God, and put himself, his sons and daughters, his descendants, the whole family of human kind into a sinful state, a state of separation from God. He involved us all by his sin, for he was our father. He stood for us, and rebelled against God. All that he did was in our name. We reap the consequences. How that first man acted was infinitely important to us.

Four thousand years later a second man appeared among men, coming miraculously, living miraculously, doing what no other man could do, speaking as no other man could speak. He claimed to be from God, to be the Son of God, to be the Son of man, the second man from heaven, the second Adam. He came not on his own account. He stood among men—so he claimed—as their representative, as a second Head for the race. He acted for the race. The first man fell and carried down the race. He would stand and rise and lift men back to God, to his favor and friendship again. Men should have a new beginning in him.

Now it becomes the great question to know all we may about him. In him we are to get back to God. By him we are to rise out of our fall. As he came for us and acts wholly for us, all that he does and all that he says bears upon us. The question how God regards him becomes infinitely important. Did God send this second man Christ Jesus into the world? Did he give him this place as head of the race? Was he to act for them, and he to bring them back to God? Did God approve of what he was doing in the world in the room and place of guilty man? You will see now the real reason and deep meaning of what Christ said,—The Father loveth the Son.

He had just healed a man on the Sabbath day, and the Jewish rulers were so angry at him for breaking the Sabbath that they sought to lay hands on him and kill him. It was in answer to their conduct, and doubtless also their suggestions and words, that such a Sabbath-breaker as he deserved death and must be obnoxious to God, that Jesus said, "The Father loveth the Son." See what they mean as he used them. The Father, God, loveth me, whom you call a Sabbath-breaker, and are ready to kill. The Father loveth me, the Son of man, the man of Nazareth, the man who hath not where to lay his head, the man despised, persecuted and hated by Scribe, and Pharisee and ruler. The Father loveth the Man of sorrow. He approves my work. He accepts what I am doing for sinful, guilty man, as their representative and head. I am living, acting, speaking, suffering, and in the fulness of time I shall die upon the cross, to which the hate of men shall nail me, but the Father will love me still and approve all my work, and commit all power into my hands to save as many as will come unto me.

The Father loveth the Son, not as God, but as man, as the Son of man, as the head of the new race of men saved, godly men, as the representative man who has taken their sins and guilt, their griefs and sorrows upon him. Do you not see how this simple statement, "The Father loveth the Son" has to do with us? It has to do with us just in proportion as we have to do with Christ.

I look about me and I do not see any men who rise out of their sins into communion with God, into assurance of pardon and eternal life, but the men who have to do with Christ, who come to him, confess and serve him.

I look around me upon men in society, upon merchants, lawyers, and physicians, upon judges, governors and senators, upon scholars and writers, and I do not find any of them, not one in the whole mass who has any sense of God's pardon, or any assurance of eternal life other than through this man Christ Jesus and his blood.

The great thing seems to be that we are connected with him, to be one with him, to be his followers, to have the benefit of his coming, and suffering and death. I do not find any other name under heaven and among men for a sinner to trust to. I do not find in the list of the world's teachers and rulers any other being whom I could trust to take care of me and see that I am reconciled, cleansed from sin and saved forever.

It is this which makes the statement of the text so assuring for me. God loved Christ. He accepted him. He approved his work as man's Savior. I may trust him with entire confidence. A criminal wants to know how his surety stands in court. Christ is my surety. He has assumed my debts. He has taken upon him my obligation. Does the great God accept him as he stands in my name and suffers for me? "The Father loveth the Son."

The statement is grand in its simplicity. It links God and Christ our Daysman together, and the link is love; but how immeasurably, how intensely, we cannot know until we sound the infinite depths of God's nature. God, the infinite One, loves the Son; the Son in human flesh, the Son who bears our guilt, the Son who stands before the holy law for us. How wonderfully this truth meets our wants! If God accepts him who took my place, and charged with my guilt, died upon the cross,—if God loved him, and I am Christ's by faith in him,—if I have become his disciple and follower, and bear his name and Spirit, then God loves me. If all the outgoings of God's heart to Jesus Christ are outgoings of love, then if I be Christ's, the outgoings of God to me also are outgoings of love. God acts towards them that are Christ's as he acts toward Christ himself. God deals with the Son on principles of love. He deals with all who have chosen Christ as a Savior on the same principles of love. Christ and they are one. It is one great leading feature in God's mind and heart to treat Christ and all that are Christ's with the same love. They are his. He has answered for them before the law. Christ is accepted, and they in him. Every thing that God does or permits must be consistent with this great fact, that the Father loves the Son, and therefore loves all that are in the Son.

I speak now to the followers of Christ, not to the unbelieving world. I speak to you who have confessed him, who have chosen him as your Redeemer and sole hope for everlasting life, who trust that you are his now, and will be his forever. Now to you this truth comes, "The Father loveth the Son," that it may help and comfort you. How it will do this let me now show you. We are in a world of temptation and trial. We are creatures of weakness and sin. Passions and lusts worry and vex us. We feel the pressure and power of these earthly and unspiritual things. We fall into sin. We lose communion with God. Religion becomes a drag and burden on our souls. We become depressed and are filled with fears. Often we seriously and honestly question whether we are really christians or not. We see so much evil and so little good in our hearts and lives that we cannot see how God can love us. Sometimes we are left in circumstances of great trial. We lose friends by death, we meet calamities, we struggle with poverty. Our earthly lot is hard and unpleasing. Sickness weakens us, every thing about us is uncongenial, and our hearts sink in despondency. We get faint under the burden of our life.

Satan takes advantage of all these things to destroy our confidence in God by telling us, "If God loved you he would not treat you so. If God loved you he would not give you so many troubles to bear. Now let us meet it with the simple fact, "The Father loveth the Son." But how does that help? Whoever had trials like the Son? What are our troubles compared with his? Recall what he, the loved one, met in this world, how sorrows came upon him, how unbefriended he was, how weighed down by burdens. Are we ever lonely so far as the world is concerned, almost friendless, thrown upon ourselves? Jesus the loved one was lonely. There were times when his followers almost all forsook him, when his dearest friends misunderstood him, and were ready to rebuke him; yet he said he was not alone, for the Father was with him. "The Father loveth the Son." Are you poor in worldly goods? Is life a toil and a struggle for daily bread? He too was poor, he had not where to lay his head, yet the "Father loved the Son." Are you often weary or worn, tired of the burden you carry, sorrows too great to breathe in any human ear, sorrows over the wayward? So Christ knew what it was to be worn in body and weary in soul. He knew what grief was. He was a man of sorrow. He often sighed in spirit, but the golden thread of God's love to him shone through all. Love and trials could exist together. Clouds came over his sky, many, threatening and dark; but the pole star of divine love shone true in the darkest night. He believed unwaveringly in the love of the Father.

There was but one brief moment in all his life, when under a load of more than mortal anguish he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" The deep persuasion of the Father's love lifted him up out of griefs and trials such as no other mortal ever knew. He had meat to eat of which the world knew nothing. He had a deep sweet rest of soul that could not have been found anywhere else on earth.

When hunted like a stag on the mountains by his murderers, when called a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber, when every act was misunderstood, when every word was maligned, when accused of blasphemy and charged with being in league with the devil, when men took up stones to stone him, when his own friends said he was mad, and professed disciples abandoned him, Christ rested himself in the Father's love. He drank of it, fed himself with it, laid his weary soul upon it as upon a bed. He covered himself with it in the storm. His trial could not wrench him away from God, nor obscure the shining of God's love.

That God allowed him to be poor, weary, homeless, tempted, hungry, friendless, slandered by men, assailed by the devil, did not disprove the divine love. Through all he had rest in God. And so for us. We shall have comfort and rest of soul when we see clearly one simple truth, that the Father himself loveth us; the Son first, and us through him. Perfect love casteth out fear. There is rest where there is assurance in love.

We need certainty. We must get clear of all doubts and speculations, all "perhapses" and "ifs" in which there is always weakness and trouble. We need to get down below the stormy surface of things. There are depths in the ocean which are never stirred by the storm which sweeps on the surface. Above, the winds roar, the waves rush mountain high, wrecks strew the sea; down below "all is calm." We must get to the love of God.

Christ never spoke of any contingency or doubtfulness as regards the Father's love. There was none. We are loved in Christ. Our humanity touches God in Christ. We had fallen utterly away from God. Christ as God came and took upon himself our human nature, took it back in his own person to the arms and embrace of God. In the person of Jesus Christ God touches and loves our human nature. "The Father loveth the Son." And through Jesus the love passes down to all of us who are one with him. United to him by faith we share in the love of God. "Behold now are we the sons of God." "If sons then heirs, joint heirs of God with Christ" and through Christ. We come into contact with God in Christ, and the feeling which God has toward Christ, he has also toward all that are Christ's. The trials and burdens of a christian no more disprove the love of God to him, than did the trials and burdens of Christ prove that he was forsaken and hated of the Father. "The servant is not greater than his Lord," that he should be exempt. "I fill up," said Paul of his trials, "that which is behind, of the afflictions of Christ." "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." The first-born was loved, chastened, reviled and scourged. He was made perfect through suffering. Love ceased not. It shone on, dimmed only to sinful eyes. So still the divine love shines on behind our clouds of trouble.

But you will say, I am worried more by my sins than I am by any other kind of trials. I can see how God loves me, though he afflicts me, though I am friendless, though I am sick in body, though I have to struggle and toil for daily bread. I understand that all this may be the discipline which I need and which God in love sends. But then I shrink from God, for I feel that I am not worthy to be loved. My sins are so many, my heart is so earthly, my life is so unspiritual. God cannot see anything in such a character and such a life as mine that is worthy of love. I am disobedient, fickle-hearted, ungrateful, worldly, selfish. I know that I do not love Christ, nor delight in God as I should. I do not find the pleasure in prayer, in the Scriptures, in worship, in communion seasons, that I should. I am not forgiving, prayerful, earnest, devoted. I am a wretched backslider. I am a miserable worldling. I cannot see how God can love me. I am not worth anything to him, or good for anything in his kingdom. That may be all true, and far more that you have dreamed of. You may be far worse than you think. But the "Father loveth the Son."

He loved him when he was carrying our sins, when he was wounded for our transgression and burdened with our iniquities. When all our shame and guilt was upon him, the Father loved him. We come to God in Christ, not in ourselves. The first person the Father sees as we poor sinners approach him is Jesus. The first feeling he has is "love." We cannot expect to ask God to love us out of Christ. He could not do it. We have no being at all, as christians, in God's mind, except as we are in Christ. God does not love us for what we are in ourselves, nor does he allow us to come to him in our own name. He loves us in Christ. He lets us come to him in Christ. We need not be afraid in coming very near to God, if we come trusting in Christ, looking for acceptance only by him, for "God loveth the Son," and when we come to God by Christ, we come to one who is full of love. When the Father sees the Son, love is ready; and no matter how many tempted believers, weak christians, and poor sinners come with Christ, clinging to his skirts, sheltering themselves in his goodness, asking mercy in his name, God will welcome them all for Christ's sake. You may well fear and be in torment if you come to God in your own righteousness. So long as you look at yourself, you will see only sin and debt, unworthiness and guilt.

People cannot believe that he is ready to receive them with love at once. They see what they deserve. They draw away from the Holy God, shrinking and trembling. They cannot believe but that he will begin to frown on them and reproach them and tell them to repent more, improve more, get better and holier, and then come and he will love them.

But how do we get to God at all? Is it not through Christ? And when we come with him, and in him, with Jesus for our leader, for our spokesman with God, for our friend with God, the Father looks at Jesus, sees him, sees his own beloved Son in our nature with his perfect righteousness, with the signal of his atonement for his brethren upon him. He loves Jesus the Son, and for the Son's sake the poor sinner, the weak christian, the returning backslider is loved too, for how could God fail to pity and love any one or anything belonging to the one whom he so much loves?

The bond then that unites us to God is not our own desert or our own goodness. The chain that links us to God is not that of our own righteousness. The bond by which we are bound to God is wholly a love bond, which reaches us by pressing down through Jesus to us. Nothing but love, free, rich, unmerited love could ever have reached us to do us any good where we lay in our guilt and sin.

The mighty arm of justice was long enough, but it would have hauled us as criminals before the bar of God. The keen eye of righteousness only would have detected our sins. Love in Christ, love incarnate, love redeeming, was the only helper for our desperate need. No other bond but love will ever hold God and man together. All the iron links of law, though each link be perfect in strength and glittering in brightness, will not hold in the wayward heart of man. Law cannot hold us. It did not hold our first father. It has held no one of his sons save Jesus only. Law does not hold the christian. Love is the only bond. The Father's love to the Son wound by him around our whole being, embracing all who are the Son's by faith in him, and the answering love of the Son drawing us, and teaching us that God is love, and that for us, the end of the commandment is love. "Love is the fulfilling of the law."

Our subject answers for us two or three questions. The first is, Why is there for the christian so much preciousness and power in prayer? Prayer is coming into close contact with God, and we only come into contact with God through the Son. There is power in true prayer because we ask in Jesus' name. The power of the plea is not our want, for our guilt answers that; it is not our earnestness, or our fervency, or our eloquence, or our perseverance; it is in the name in which we come, a name that is above every name, a name that stands for perfect righteousness and a finished atonement.

The preciousness of prayer lies in this, that we seek access to God's mind through a channel of love. We read God through the love he has for his Son. We speak through the beloved One and the loving One. When conscious of our own unworthiness and ill-desert we put up a prayer through the Son, how it strengthens our faith and animates our hope to remember that "The Father loveth the Son." It passes to God through one who perfectly loves and fully obeys God, along a road of love; and surely only an answer of love can come forth from him of whom the highest word of inspiration is—"God is love."

Our subject answers also the question, Why we make so much of the ordinance of baptism and the Lord's Supper? They are the channels by which God reveals and communicates his love and grace. Baptism signifies and seals our ingrafting into the church. It proclaims our oneness with the Son whom the Father loves. The Lord's Supper also proclaims our union with him and our share in all the benefits of his mediation of love unto death. Both ordinances connects us with Christ who for us is the only way to the Father.

Our subject also gives us an answer to the question, Why we make so much of Jesus? He is the beloved one of the Father. He is the exalted one, set up above all principalities and powers. We make so much of Jesus because it is through him only that we can know anything of the love of God. It is through him we come to the Father. No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him. Apart from the knowledge of God's love we would not dare to know him. But Jesus reveals God. He tells us that God loves us, that he gave up his beloved One for us. There was the love of the Father in sending, and the love of the Son in coming. A double love of the Godhead to show how immensely heaven values us.

We make much of the Son because he made so much of us in dying that we might be reconciled to God; and the Father made so much of him that for his sake he can welcome back to his love and favor a world of guilty sinners. Already have we great things through the Beloved of the Father. But we shall have greater things throughout eternity. What we now have is but bitter beside what is to come, and all through the Son; outpourings of the Father's heart forever and ever, the lavishing of divine love on the Savior and his followers throughout all eternity.

Our hope is in Christ alone now. We stand in God's favor because he stands our Redeemer. We are accepted in him—and so forever and ever the joy, and gift, and overflowings of God's love will be the portion of believers through the Son.

THE LIFE-GIVER.

R. P. ELDREDGE.

"I am the resurrection and the life."

The sting of death is taken away; "and because I live, ye shall live also." How firm a foundation has been laid for the faith of the christian in the death and resurrection of Him who was the first fruits of them that slept—He in whom were united the human and the divine; and who, having been tempted as we sometimes are, comes to our aid just at the right time and in the right places; for he says, "Lo, I am with you alway."

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our griefs and woes to bear;
What a privilege to carry
Every thing to God in prayer."

He is "our elder Brother." "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham." He was made like unto us, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest, coming between us and God to take away our sins.

What goodness in the Infinite One to give us such a mediator. One too who was a "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Yes, he is just what we need, having, like us, been made partakers of flesh and blood. One would think that all would be willing, yea, eager to accept Christ, as he is held up in the "Word of life," as he is an unfailing help in every time of need, and needy we always are.

"I need thee, precious Jesus;
I need thee day by day,
To fill me with thy fulness,
To lead me on my way.
I need thee, precious Jesus,
And hope to see thee soon,
Encircled with the rainbow,
And seated on thy throne."

"Suppose the Israelites, stung by the fiery serpents in the wilderness, had refused or neglected to look up at the brazen serpent, how many would have been saved? Many thousands more would have died; not because there was no remedy provided, not because of its being inaccessible, for every Israelite could behold the brazen serpent from their tent door. They would have died because of their neglect or refusal to look. Let us ever look to Jesus. Look to him by faith, for he can heal us from all the wounds that sin has made. We may have brought all our "tithes into the store-house;" yet, if we cast away our "confidence," and do not look by faith, our looking will avail us nothing.

Dear reader, if you have failed a thousand times, take the precious promises of Jesus, and cast yourself upon him; for he is an ever-present Savior, willing to give you that peace, that joy, for which you sigh. Glory be to Jesus! he can cleanse from sin. The heart that believes in him, as a perfect Savior, enters into rest and peace. Oh! how sweet to know that Jesus dwells in our hearts, and no one can take him from us. "Abide in me." When we know that we abide in Christ, that we stand upon that firm Rock, and feel his strong arm around us; that we are over-shadowed by his wings, and know that he will protect us in passing through the many ills of this life, how secure we feel. Though the fiery darts of the enemy may be flying around us, yet we hear the sweet whisperings of Jesus, "Abide in me," and all is safe.

If it is so blessed, so delightful, to have Jesus with us here, how glorious will it be to dwell with him in his everlasting kingdom, to go no more out forever. And yet the most glorious sight will be to see Jesus on his great white throne, and join the great hallelujah, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints."

"Oh! happy day that fixed my choice
On thee, my Savior and my God."

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Hope is a presentiment compounded of expectation and desire. It is not expectation simply, for we sometimes expect things to happen which are unwelcome; but we never hope for them. When we have reason to expect things which are good we desire to attain them, and this constitutes hope. If our condition be unpleasant and disagreeable, we hope that, in the changes to take place, something will turn up for the better. Hope always has reference to the future and to something we deem attainable. It implies the unsatisfactory nature of our present condition and enjoyments and the anticipation of an improvement.

Man's original condition was good. It was adapted to his nature as a sinless and untried moral agent; but it was not perfect. It was improvable in its circumstances, and that improvement was attainable by the establishment of a good moral character through continued obedience to God. This awakened expectation and desire. Hope was there to lend its influence in the attainment of holiness.

This hope, as far as it was founded on the conditions and terms of the first covenant, was destroyed by transgression. The tempter persuaded man that improvement would be at once secured by eating the forbidden fruit. This begat a false hope and lured him on to sin. And when once the fatal step was taken he found that he had not only come short of the glory of God, but had brought upon himself and his posterity the penalty of death. And this only loomed up in the future, darkening his estate with the gloom of despair.

The foundation of hope was laid anew in the promise of God through the seed of the woman, the second representative man, the incarnate Son of God, and Redeemer of the human race. The revelation of the divine purpose to recover man from the ruin of sin was made to Adam and his posterity from the beginning, through successive ages and generations, by promise, by prophecy, by types and ceremonial institutions, until the seed came, and the Son of God was born of a woman. Then life and immortality were brought to light by the gospel, and the sun of salvation shone for all mankind.

The word of God, revealed in the Holy Scriptures, is the medium, instrumentality and occasion of this hope. Take this away, and all is dark as despair and silent as death. There is no other medium of hope. But whatsoever things were written afore time were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope.

There is much to hope for in connection with the manifestation of divine love to man. Everything promised to us, and not yet attained, may be the object of hope. But there is one object which transcends every other, as it includes the fullest perfection, the highest glory and the greatest joy of which humanity is capable. This is the hope of which John says, "And every one that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure," and which is delineated in the preceding words, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." 1 John 3: 2, 3. It is the hope that we shall be made perfectly like Christ at his second coming.

This hope includes the first resurrection, of which Christ's resurrection is the pledge and pattern. As Peter says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." It is called the hope of salvation, as it contemplates a full and entire redemption from all sin and evil. It is called the hope of eternal life, as it contemplates immortality and incorruptibility. It is called the hope of glory as it contemplates a participation in the glory of God and exaltation in the kingdom of Christ in sharing his governmental honors.

It is to be made like Christ morally, through the purifying influences of the truth and the operation of the Holy Spirit. Into this image we are being now renewed by the gospel. This is effected by the influence of this hope itself; for every one who believes the gospel unto salvation, hath this hope in him and so purifieth himself as Christ is pure. Hope exerts an influence. It sets us upon doing whatever is necessary to attain its object. Worldly hope sets the ambitious upon seeking worldly honors and qualifying themselves for it. It sets the covetous upon seeking wealth by enterprise and economy. It sets the voluptuous upon seeking earthly pleasures, and cultivating a taste for sensual joys. The christian hope sets its possessor on purifying himself, and following after holiness, without which no one can see the Lord. It leads to sincere and thorough repentance, abstinence from all lusts which war against the soul. It keeps him constant in the use of the means of grace, and watchful against all the devices of Satan. It keeps him in constant looking for the coming of the Lord, when the consummation of this work shall be reached by being confirmed in holiness before God.

It is to be made like Christ mentally, and to some extent progressively even here. The life of faith has its growth in knowledge and experience as in holiness. But here we also know only in part. There is much in our condition and circumstances here to prevent a full development of our mental powers, and obstruct our advancement in knowledge; and they who make the greatest progress in the knowledge of the truth, know only in part. But then our mental capacity will be perfectly developed, and our apprehension and knowledge of truth in all its relations will be instant and complete. We shall know even as we are known.

It is to be made like Christ physically; for as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly; and our vile body shall be changed, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Then mortal shall put on immortality and corruption shall put on incorruption.

It is to be made like Christ politically. Believers in Christ are chosen, elected in him to be kings and priests unto God, and to reign with him in his kingdom. They will be the rulers of the world to come. Jesus says, "To him that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations," and "To him will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne." Hence Christ, in his prayer to the Father, said, "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me." And so we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.

Such is the christian's hope, and every one who hath this hope in him purifieth himself. The seeming delay of the Savior's coming gives occasion for the patient exercise of this hope, and the purifying of our hearts by faith. Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward; for ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise; for yet a little while and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."—Watch Tower.

REPENT.

W. J. W.

"Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

Many repent without turning from their evil ways. When the responsibility which they hold before God is brought home to them, they feel sorrowful for having so long grieved a kind and loving Father, and will to do differently; but having no root within themselves, permit their natural inclinations to lead them back to their former careless life. Our Lord surely has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. This assurance should be a source of great comfort to the saints who are continually seeking to know and do the Lord's will. He is far more willing to save us than we are to be saved. If he was not, many with whom the Spirit of God strives would perish. If a careless young man should see in this Scripture heading the love that God has for him, I would ask him, Why delay to repent and be saved? O turn, for one moment, your gaze from a sinful world and its fascinating charms, and behold Jesus as he is at the right hand of his Father, with all the love that he had when here on earth; and hear him saying, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." No longer slight his invitation, but turn from your evil ways, and be prepared to meet the coming King, and receive from his lips the "well done."

PRAYER.

Prayer is not an oration which is designed to explain to God his own attributes. No man need to spend ten or twenty minutes in telling the Creator how great and how good he is. Such speeches would be an insult even to a man, and how can we imagine them to appear before the Supreme Ruler of the universe? Man cannot approach the Father in an act of devotion without realizing his own insignificance. But when he undertakes to explain their relative positions to God, he runs the risk of losing all devotional feeling and degenerating into an attempt at a literary production.

Many an elaborate composition has been delivered to please an audience, which was very far from being a prayer in the only true sense of the word. It is enough to chill the blood in one's veins to hear the flippant expression, "What a splendid prayer that was." If anything is sacred and free from criticism or compliment, it ought surely to be the pleadings of poor humanity with its only Friend. But instead of this we have stereotyped forms of prayer adapted to various occasions, and not only that, but prayers which are supposed to be extemporaneous, are reported and published and sold as the eloquent production of some fine speaker. What opinion can God and the angels have of this kind of merchandise? How much devotion is there in a prayer which a man knows he is delivering to a reporter that it may be circulated by the press? How much faith can he have that God will answer a petition which is in every sense a mockery and an insult to the Majesty of heaven? This is one extreme and there is another.

There is one class of men who will not pray at all in public (and possibly some of them not even in secret), because there are others who make "long prayers for a pretence;" men who will get up and make an address upon the theories of Christianity without recognizing its Author; men who will undertake to teach without seeking the aid of the Great Teacher; men who will give laws to mankind without consulting the Master, who will undertake to feed the sheep without reference to the good Shepherd. We are forbidden to pray for the purpose of being seen of men, but Jesus our great Exampler prayed before the multitude at the grave of Lazarus, and his followers may, and should thus ackowledge the Father before men.

Our instructions, both by precept and example, are not to be ashamed of God, nor afraid to acknowledge him in public as well as private. But we are also to remember that the Son of God most frequently sought solitude wherein to converse with the Father, so also the great burden of the christian's prayer is in secret—in the closet or in the chamber where God alone can hear and approve, and we have the promise of an open reward. The ear of the Father is ever open to the pleadings of his children. His heart is ever alive to their sufferings and his hand is always ready to minister to their needs.

The pitiful cry of a wounded child will reach our hearts quicker than an ordinary request; so the deep earnest call to the Father for help will always bring aid from on high. It may be borne to the throne in plaintive broken words, or possibly in no words at all. I may be only the pitiful throb of an aching heart reaching upward for help; but God is pledged to answer the cry and his pledges are never in vain. He who feedeth the ravens and watcheth the fall of the sparrow, will never betray the heart that trusts him. "Therefore, in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your request be made known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."—Restitution.

THE BEAREAN CASKET.

"I cannot help thinking that there is much meaning in Rom. 8: 20. 'For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope.' "

The Book that speaks of a groaning creation tells us that it shall be delivered into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God. Why do we not take the consolation which this assurance contains, and thank God for it, instead of mourning over the sore travail and pain that surround us as if they were mysteries for which there is neither solution nor end? He who pronounced all things very good before sin, and sorrow, and death entered the world will yet "rejoice in his works" (Psa. 104: 31); whilst the Seer of Patmos tells us that the testimony of the perfected, when the resurrection light shall have scattered all the clouds of the mortal pilgrimage, will be "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Rev.4: 11. Moreover, still farther on, as the "visions of God" are unfolded to his sight, he says, "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things have passed away."

Now when the destined period arrives when there shall be no more pain, it is obvious that the birth-pangs of creation, which now "travaileth in pain," will have ceased, and the vanity to which all things were unwillingly subjected will have passed away to make room for the liberty and the glory which God had in view when he imposed this temporary doom.

Try to realize by a strong effort of imagination the surprise and sorrow, the grief and consternation that overwhelmed the mind of the first man, when he heard the sentence of the Judge: "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, thou hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shall not eat of it, cursed is the ground fon thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Thus man and his world were subjected to vanity—decay; the word here means the transitory nature of all animated creation; it speedily passes away, from the insect that dances its brief hour in the sunbeam, to the comparatively strong man who nevertheless finds life at fourscore years "only labor and sorrow." Psa. 90: 10. The creature could not be willing to be thus subjected to pain and decay; every day we are fighting against them, although with the consciousness that we are the weaker of the combatants; yet the same essential reason of perfect wisdom, acting in harmony with perfect love, which led the Creator to eject the disobedient man from Eden, lest he should eat of the tree of life and live forever in moral alienation from God, led him to subject creation to decay that he might make room for the perfect and the durable in the new creation in the glorious age to come. Vanity is the co-relative—the merciful co-relative—of moral disorder, and they shall pass away together; whilst stability will be the eternal co-relative of all who, having Christ's life in them, shall live forever.—Rainbow.

The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

AT HAND.

"Frisk on with the dance and swell the chorus,
And moist with wine the throats of the band:
For are there not years in plenty before us?"
The Lord is at hand.

"Make merry the day with pipe and tabor,
Make sweet the night at desire's demand,
Let us reap rich fruit for our fathers' labor."
The Lord is at hand.

"What need to toil as others are toiling?
We have house and bondmen, and goods and land,
We have meat to eat and vines for spoiling."
The Lord is at hand.

"Behold our bulwarks—no bold invader
Could shake their strength by bolt or brand;
The Crescent shines—there is no Crusader!"
The Lord is at hand.

"Our walls are in nowise rude and ragged,
They are smoothly set in a sea of sand;
But the rocks above us are stubborn and jagged."
The Lord is at hand.

"Yon broiling carles on crag and on shelving
Make heavy their life and shorter-spanned;
Their soil is barren and hard for delving."
The Lord is at hand.

O fools—and blind for their own dull twilight!
O blind—and fools not to understand;
That hide their faces, O Lord, from thy light!
The Lord is at hand.

Work, toil-worn hands that are weary of working,
Plan, throbbing brain, there is more to be planned;
But a strange fair dawn in the clouds is lurking!
The Lord is at hand.

Your steadfast home on a sure foundation
Shall be grand as firm, and be sweet as grand;
And ye shall have rest of the Lord's salvation.
The Lord is at hand.

WONDERFUL PROPHECY.
The "Abomination of Desolation."

A. W. SIBLEY.

The point at which the world has now arrived, in the prophetic calendar, is one clearly penciled and minutely described by the holy seer, as he gazed through the vista of ages and spoke of events in the future as though they were transpiring and filling up their measured cup in human history.

The unrest that now characterizes society, the breaking up of old political compacts and the moral status of the world, together with the political standing of the papal hierarchy and its visible head in the Vatican at Rome, should awaken an interest in every Bible student to the importance of a careful investigation of what the Master, apostles and prophetes have said relative to the grand crisis and eventful era to which all things seem tending.

That the world is being shaped in the prophetic mould, perhaps unconsciously, that the agencies for the acomplishment of God's great purposes are silently and gradually moulding the nations of earth, preparatory to the last grand struggle in human history, and for the time when it will be said to the angels, "thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe," is clearly indicated in the events of the passing hour as well as from the unerring Word of truth. The present effort will be to ascertain and make plain the facts as to what power is referred to in our Lord's great pcophecy in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, fifteenth verse, known by the name of the "Abomination of Desolation."

In this chapter the Savior has given us a chain of consecutive events, reaching from that eventful period of Jerusalem's destruction to the final consummation of all things earthly, and to the introduction of a kingdom, the extent of which will be from the rivers to the ends of the earth.

It seems that this chapter was uttered by the Savior on Mt. Olives, and the twenty-first chapter of Luke, supposed to be the same by some, was spoken in the temple. After listening to it in the temple the disciples wished to know something more relative to it, so they repaired to Mt. Olives, where the Master gave them a more detailed statement of those things that should happen on the earth.

Mt. Olives is an important place, made so not only by the frequent visitations of the Savior and his disciples, but from the fact that of its being the place from whence our Lord ascended into heaven. It was geograpically located east of Jerusalem, and separated by the narrow valley of Jehoshaphat and the brook of Kidron. The City of Jerusalem was in full view from this place. There were two roads leading to this mountain; one went up and crossed the summit and the other extended around the south end to Bethany. The former, it is said, was shorter but more difficult, and it was probably from this the Savior ascended to the throne of the "Majesty" in the heavens.

In calling your attention to the subject of the great abomination, we beg leave to differ from many who have written upon and applied it to the the Roman army around Jerusalem, in the year seventy of the christian era. That this power is one of gigantic proportion, and of great political and religious importance, and unparalleled in the nature of its work, is evident from the predicted policy it is to carry out.

A power in prophecy is indentified by the work which it does, and as the work which this power was to accomplish was not performed by the Roman army around Jerusalem, we therefore conclude that it was not the army of Titus that demolished the city of the Jews in the year of our Lord seventy. According to the prophecy of Daniel this power was to take away the daily sacrifice, stand in the holy place or pollute the sanctuary of strength, wear out the saints of the Most High, think to change times and laws, speak great words against the Most High, and continue one thousand two hundred and sixty years.

Now, If the Roman army under Titus did not carry out the predicted work which the Abomination of Desolation was to perform, then it is proved conclusively that it is not the power of which the Savior speaks and to which he calls our attention. We think it must be obvious to all, after looking at the subject, that Titus' army in A. D. 70 cannot be the desolating power referred to by the Savior for the following reasons: The Roman army did not stand in the holy place.

That the land of Palestine is known as the holy land we admit, but it cannot be said that Jerusalem was any more holy at this time than any other portion of earth's territory; besides, Jesus did not say that this power should stand in the holy land, but in the holy place, which place in the year seventy was in the temple, being separated from the most holy by a great vail. The temple at Jerusalem at this time was only nominally holy, not really so, for a long time previous to this the Master said the Jews had made it a den of theives.

In the Gospel according to St. Mark 13: 14, it is said that the Abomination of Desolation shall stand "where it ought not." The Roman army when it stood around Jerusalem in A. D. 70 was where God purposed it should be, for we read, "he sent forth his armies and destroyed those murderers and burned up their city." Matt. 22: 7.

2. The Roman army did not continue around Jerusalem for one thousand two hundred and sixty years.

3. It did not wear out the saints of the Most High. We learn that Cestus Gallus, in the twelfth year of Nero's reign, drew an army around the city of Jerusalem, but suddenly withdrew his forces without any apparent reason; after which, Eusebius says, "The whole body, however, of the church at Jerusalem having been commanded by divine revelation . . . . . removed from the city and dwelt at a certain town beyond the the Jordan, called Pella.

4. The Roman army did not "change times and laws, which work the little horn power purposed to do.

5. If the Roman army is the abomination of which the text speaks, why was it not fulfilled when Pompey demolished the walls of Jerusalem and entered the "holy of holies" B. C. 63? We read from Prideaux as follows: "And thus after a seige of three months was the temple of Jerusalem taken by the Romans in the end of the first year of the 179th Olympiad. . . . . . Pompey on concluding the war demolished the walls of Jerusalem, and then restored Hyrcamus to the office of high priest and made him also prince of the conntry under tribute to the Romans."—Prid. Vol. II. p. 285.

Again, we learn from history that Jerusalem was taken by the Romans B. C. 37, and a great slaughter of people ensued. Gessius Florus, one of the worst of Roman governors, after murdering more than twenty-seven thousand Jews in various places, entered Jerusalem and put to death about three thousand of its inhabitants. White's Universal History. p. 135.

Next comes Cestus Gallus with his army around Jerusalem, A. D. 66, or the twelfth year of Nero's reign. Again Vespasian, after subduing the revolted provinces, drew his army around the famous city, in the year seventy. Thus it appears that if the Roman army was the abomination, it was set up no less than four different times, and did not do the work which Inspiration declares that it should do; consequently we conclude that it cannot be the army of Titus by any sound rule of Scripture exegesis.

(To be concluded.)

HE THAT OVERCOMETH.

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2: 7. Here is their resting-place from the storms of life. Their trials are past, and they are now with the redeemed throng. No death will reach that band of white-robed victors. For says the Prince of peace, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," Rev. 2: 11. Life immortal will there span the untold ages of eternity, rolling on in the sublime cycles of endless glory. Oh! how sweet to live forever, and partake of life's immortal fruit and die no more, for we shall not be hurt of the second death. Then will be the day of joy and triumph, for says Jesus, "He that overcometh, and keepeth my word unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Rev. 2: 26–28:

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father on his throne." Rev. 3: 21. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." Rev. 21: 7. "He that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God." Rev. 3: 12. "He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot his name out of the book of life." Rev. 3: 5. May we gain the victory, overcome the world, share the glory, wear the crown, wave the palm, and reign forever with the Lamb.—Selected.

THE COMING CRISIS.

D. T. TAYLOR.

The Greeks styled the sin of ignorance culpa. Such sins were readily pardonable. But the wilful sin was krima; it was a criminal offence, something damnable, a matter to be brought into judgment. Judgment comes on account of wilful sin, implacable offence. It must be punished. Judgment never comes to a pure age or a holy people. Where sin and blasphemy culminate, where reeking crime runs highest, there and then wrath falls—God drops his fiery bolts. In proportion as sin increases, judgment impends and darkly hovers near. The greatness of the sin measures the intensity of the judgment. There have been past judgments for sin, but in the end of time's ages the judgment of judgments will surely come. That day is nearing.

I have said that the period of culmination and climax of ages of sin and evil is in Scripture called krisis, and that this was the chosen word used by the Holy Ghost to describe the critical point in the future history of mortals. From the Greek krisis comes our English word crisis, which denotes a "turning point." In all crises or turning points, two things are observable. First, there is a previous, severe pressure; and second, the subject goes either up or down. Thus we speak of a financial crisis, a fever crisis, or of a national crisis, to which people and nations are subject. The pressure of the previous disease or strain is often tremendous. It is manifest to all eyes. The rise or fall, the release or collapse is sure to follow. The turning point either brings relief from the strain, or the patient or nation goes down, and a different order or system of things begins. Renovation or ruin follows on the heels of crisis. Judgment periods are critical periods in a nation's history. As in financial crises, the causes which precede them are overdoing, overstraining, etc., just so in national and world crises, the causes are seen in human action, in ill doing, in sin and evil—sure always to culminate unfavorably. All such crises are ill-omened for those who court their prognosis. After crisis, health, purity, stability, honor, virtue come to the front, while disease, instability, crime and wrong die. A radical change is witnessed.

There have been critical periods, turning points, and judgments for nations and the world in the past. Let us notice them.

There was a turning point for all mankind at the gates of our lost Eden, when a brief, beautiful age ended sadly. The evil one was first sentenced, the federal head of the new race exiled, and the reign of sin and death began. Alas, what a crisis was that!

There was a terrible crisis at the deluge. The pressure before it came was fearful. Sin raged. A long age of trial for men broke up in convulsion. The evil went down in an abyss of angry waters. The good saw the approach of the storm, came to surface in honor, out-rode the billows on a shoreless sea, and survived the turning point. Goodness in men never urged on that great crisis. It was crime that provoked it. Then a new and for a time a purer age coursed on.

There was a judgment crisis when the "Judge of all the earth" (Gen. 18: 25) visited four cities in the valley of Jordan, and for their iniquities smote them with fire. The turning point was terrible, but the Judge was "right." As in Eden and before the flood, the over doer, the loose doer, the reckless doer went down in the crash, ever sure to follow sin's hateful strain; but the good—that which was vital and worth saving—came on the top in favor and honor.

There was a judgment, (Acts 7: 7), a master turning point in Egypt's history, such as never occurred to it before, when its haughty monarch resisted all overtures of compromise, all efforts of divine mercy. A long, weary age ended. The pressure while its days were running out was fearful; bolt after bolt fell; sin and arrogance rode higher and higher; wrath came to the uttermost, and the proud enemy sunk like lead in the avenging waters. But the good sung songs of victory on the further shore, and came to the summit of fame and power. As ever before and since that crisis, the critical point was reached by reason of sin and rebellion. God will not, cannot brook it. Rejected mercy is ever followed by judgment.

And that was a sharp, dreadful crisis that came at last to doomed Jerusalem and her apostate people. It broke up a long age of apostacy. It inaugurated a new era. No christian came to grief in the siege of the wicked city. Evil men were slaughtered and made captive by the million. Before the grand crisis came, how guilt piled up to heaven! How blasphemy ran wild! It is the same old story: Sin brought the judgment.

In all these crises there is seen the certain result of well-known causes, the close relation of crime and vengeance, the sure destiny of an evil course. Man provoked Deity to bring judgment. Sin broke up nationalities, rolled on desolating floods, kindled exterminating fires. Every age grew worse till it ended. The maddening strain on virtue and law by sin's aggression, like the increased vascular and febrile excitement of the fever patient, hurried on the turning point, and as in all critical states, the strain, the strait, the distress grew greater, and the chances of the subject more and more desperate until the very critical point was reached; then judgment fell, the sword cut deep, men were put on a new trial, all things changed, the devil went down, God sat on the throne doing right, "judging right." Psa. 9: 4. He was Critic of all. His criterion stood. His judgment was just.

Another krisis is coming—one more grand, prolonged, sharp, decisive, last crisis. It is the crisis of this and every other age. It is the "judgment to come," at which even kings tremble. It is the "day of judgment," eight times thus definitely named in the Book. It is the judgment of judgments, the day of days, the "day for which all other days were made," the last great day. Other crises were local; this one is universal. Other crises were for a city or nation; this one is for a whole world. This age began well—it has coursed on in sin—it will end in judgment. Every prophetical vision recorded in God's Book, every announced course and order of the age by seer of old, every chain of seals, trumpets, and vials, every serial order of world empires, every word of Christ in the memorable prediction on Olivet, every analogy of the past, every foreshadowing of the present, all omens, all signs, all types, all tokens, all fingers thus set set forth the beginning, the course, and the end of this dispensation. "So shall it be in the end of this age." How? Matt. 13: 40.

Nearly nineteen centures are passed since the birth of Him by whose magnificent era and existence all civilized people count the years. Is the end of the ages near? It is idle to deny it. Witness the opening up of all the earth, the ripening of all things, the fullness of kingdoms, the completeness of all history, the exausting of time's prophecies, the march of empire, the waning of effete dynasties, the proved inefficiency of man's rule. Behold the hurrying to and fro, the intensifying of all human action, the fevered condition of society, the excitement, the haste, the wild delirious dreams of human nature, the strange actions of mankind. Consider the distress of scores of nations, the strain on all civilized governments, the derangements of currency, the bankrupt state of the forty-three great world-powers, the more than twenty millions of dollars of debt crushing them, the insane armed peace, requiring ten millions of men under arms to keep that peace, the anger at and fear of one another.

Think of the general alarm concerning what is yet to come, the cry of fear by science regarding the safety and stability of our planet, the strange augeries of nearing unknown changes, the failures, the totterings, the startling mutations that thrill all hearts, the crashes that stun all ears. Watch the increase of all crimes, the intensifying of devilish sin, the vileness of the race that wilfully refuses reform, the hatred of clear light, the apathy and indifference, not to speak of the dislike regarding our Lord's return to inaugurate the grand crisis—all these and much more—and say, Is not the world getting like the old garment? Heb. 1: 10–12. Is not the crisis near? And just as the fever increases in the patient until he appears consuming with fire; as the vessel tips more and more to the centre when about to go down in the water; as the strain in great financial derangements is greater and greater until men, appalled, gloomily inquire, "What is coming next?" so does the world roll on while doom approaches swift and sure.

The consummation cometh! Again an evil world will go down—this time forever. The good will survive the crash, will come to the surface, to go down no more. The thunder and lightning of judgment will blast sin and purify the universe. The new age will begin. It is stamped upon the earth, it is written in the sky, it is borne upon the winds, and all men see, and hear, and feel the signs of that coming crisis. A thousand voices herald its near approach. A thousand sins hurry on the judgment day. A thousand prayers hasten its coming. Disraeli comes of a race that gave us the Bible. Without doubt he reads it. I believe it was with thoughtful, intelligent anticipation that he uttered the warning, and he was right, when, on July 2nd, 1874, in bold words in the British House of Commons, he cried in the ears of England's assembled wisdom, and through a myriad-tongued press to the whole race of men—"The great crisis of the world is nearer than some suppose!"—Bible Banner.

FEAR.

Absence of fear is no evidence of safety. It is manly to fear when good cause exists. Those who declare otherwise are false teachers. Why should we close our eyes to danger, and sit unmoved when perils impend? Is that the fruit of wisdom, or a sign of stupidity and blindness? The frequent advice never to yield to religious fears is as contrary to philosophy and common sense as it is to Scripture.

The sinner is in danger, and he ought to be alarmed. His indifference is a sign of moral derangement; stupidity; a lack of true, manly, wise discretion. He treads on the verge of a ruin that knows no remedy; a peril confronts him which exceeds all earthly disasters, and a little delay places him beyond all hope. Is it low and weak to recoil from such dangers? The man who fears, rises far above the stupid in real manliness. The former acts the part of wisdom, the latter that of folly. God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" and soul-death should be dreaded, and turned from with fear and prompt resolve. "Blessed is the man that feareth always." "Let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."—The Christian.

Destiny.—The wheels of nature are not made to roll backward: every thing passes on toward eternity: from the birth of time an impetuous current has set in, which bears all the sons of men toward that interminable ocean. Meanwhile heaven is attracting to itself whatever is congenial to its nature, is enriching itself by the spoils of earth, and collecting within its capacious bosom whatever is pure, permanent, and divine.—Robert Hall.

CHRIST A SURE STAY.

Jesus came to be a Savior; to draw men to him by the magnetism of the cross. Having passed through the various forms of temptation, he knows how to succor those that are tempted. Having been made perfect through suffering, as the Captain of our salvation, he is very tender and pitiful to all who suffer, and gives great succor to great needs. The human life of Jesus supplies an element of strength and comfort to christians under great trials, no other religion can furnish. He is a real and present help in every time of need, as thousands gratefully bear witness, from their own personal experience.

In Greek and Roman history the Stoical philosophy was held in high favor because it made men heroic in suffering. They nerved themselves to bear pain, disappointments and death without flinching. Accepting affliction as a decree of fate reaching to all, they held that the energy of the human will can conquer extreme torture. Their ideal of strength to endure, was Prometheus, chained on Mt. Caucasus by the decree of Jupiter, and exposed to the fierce tempests, and to constant attacks by birds of prey, but, by his heroic will, bidding defiance alike to the torments of nature and of the gods.

The Buddhists adore passive resignation as the highest of human virtues. One should be unmoved, they hold, by sickness or losses, or by great prosperity and success. To annihilate emotion is with them the chief aim of life. But the fortitude of Prometheus and the apathy of the Buddhist are alike foreign to numan nature. They may excite the admiration of the many, but can inspire imitation in few. Man needs to draw courage and sympathy from sources outside of himself, if he is to bear the burdens of life without murmuring or despair. He needs a personal God, in whose wise government he can trust, and on whose love he can lean.

Judaism, or any faith revealing the one God as the moral governor of the world, provides a strong staff for the troubled to lean on. We can bow to his will, assured that it orders all things wisely, and that patient submission will surely bring relief. The grace of submission may be hard to attain, but it holds unseen blessings, which make the soul quiet and strong. One who had tested its worth by long experience, says: "The great secret of spiritual perfection is expressed in the words of Ignatius Loyola, 'Hoc vult Deus' (God wishes this). God wishes me to stand in this post, to fulfill this duty, to suffer this disease, to be afflicted with this calamity, this contempt, this vexation. God wishes this; whatever the world and self-love may dictate; his will is my law."

This loving submission differs widely from the stern endurance of the Stoic, or the enforced apathy of the Buddhist; for it opens the heart to the divine riches of consolation, while the reason rests calmly on the divine wisdom and sovereignty.

If a divine hand lead us, we cannot miss the way. If he orders our daily life, nothing can thwart his pleasure. In his great plan, all trials, and losses, all joys and griefs, all temptations and falls even, take their allotted place, and contribute their share in working out his good pleasure. It is sweet to trust him, even though he slay us. Moses, with meek submission, Isaiah, with prophetic trust, David, with loving faith, suffered themselves to rest in "the everlasting arms," and were upheld alway.

But Jesus, by his advent in human nature, and his experience of human life, has brought a new element of light and comfort into all suffering. He has left an example, that we should follow in his steps, and say from the heart, "Not my will, O Lord, but thine be be done." And far more than this, by the wonderful mystical union, in which he identifies himself with his people, he makes submission both easy and joyful. His strength becomes ours; his filial spirit assimilates our rebellious wills, till they find it meat and drink to do the will of our Father in heaven. The apostles entered into this blessed experience. James could count it all joy to fall into divers temptations; Paul rejoiced that he was counted worthy to fill up what was wanting in the sufferings of Christ; and Peter could exult in the fiery trial that was just at hand, because the partakers of Christ's sufferings would also be the partakers of his glory.

The martyrs in all ages have found Christ to be their life, and have sung hymns of praise when their flesh was torn by pincers or consumed by flames. The gentle Felicitas, in the third century, said with a sublime trust, "When I burn to morrow at the stake, I shall not suffer alone, but he for whom I suffer will be with me, and suffer for me;" and her bright hopes fell short of the reality. And all disciples find themselves inspired with zeal to labor, or fortitude to bear, in proportion as they enter into a personal union with Christ by faith, and he abides in the soul, the hope of glory.

One of the ripest christians of our day, the accomplished wife of Augustus Hare, in England, found herself sustained under trials hard to bear, and her life full of gladness and strength by this daily union with Christ. "It seems to me there is a germ of truth contained in Quakerism, Mysticism, and even the enlarged Unitarian notion of the Godhead, but all equally fail in not being adapted to the corruption of the outward world, wherein, without becoming hermits, temptation to evil is unavoidable, and corruption in the heart, which, though rendered in the regenerate subordinate to the love of God, is not rooted out. So that without continual beholding of God in Christ, we shall grow cold in love; without looking to him as our justification, we shall become faint in hope; and without making him our example, we shall come short of holiness."

The worldly man is to be sorely pitied, who has not Jesus for a friend. He may think himself rich and increased in goods, and contented with worldly gains. But the days of darkness and of struggle will come, and the heart will ache in bitter grief, and yearn for a divine comforter. Christ in the heart adds new sunshine to the day; and without Christ the brightest sky casts its shadows. Nor is the christian to be envied who does not daily live in Christ, and walk in him. . . . To be Christ's wholly and Christ's always is perpetual joy and strength. —The Contributor.

FOR WHOSE SINS DID CHRIST DIE?

O. W. GILLESPIE.

"For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.—Rom. 5: 6.

Errors are often committed by the learned as well as the unlearned, in their attempts to sustain a doctrine, the surface of which is truth, but the whole inside, or groundwork, is absolute error. When Scripture is used to cover a doctrine to which one has committed himself, it sometimes passes for truth among the common people, when in fact it is only counterfeit, and is detected as such when tested by the standard.

Much mischief has been done among us as a people, by those who are eager to unfold new truths, by thus coating their ideas with Scripture, and urging them as "present truth." Nothing but the genuine will pass inspection. Nothing but solid truth will stand the test in the day of final assize.

On one occasion I heard a preacher use the text, "The wages of sin is death," and in making the application he said that "every man died for his own sins, good and bad. He died because he was a sinner." Now this application would not have been made had not a false doctrine required it, to give it the semblance of truth. For if men die, good and bad, for their "own sins," then, for whose sins did Christ die? Was he a sinner? I do not think that any one would thus accuse Jesus. But the application referred to tends to that conclusion; or else, his death was not adequate for the emergency, for the penalty is "death." And if his death was not sufficient as a ransom for us, then our case is a hopeless one, for we are under sentence of death.

Some are ready to say yes, if Christ died as a sinner. But you do not want to admit that, for then is our case hopeless indeed. But Christ died not as a sinner, but as a ransom. Not for his sins, but for ours. Do we die then, as the "wages of sin?" We answer, no, "for the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. Our sins are forgiven by reason of repentance and faith in him who has become the propitiation for our sins, whereby we are pardoned and justified.

And yet we die, good and bad, but not as the wages of sin, but as in Adam. All die in Adam. Who then are to die as the "wages of sin?" The unpardoned, the finally impenitent. They thus die, not because they are sinners by nature, but for their own sins. They are to die as a penalty for remaining in sin, when there is a fountain open for all uncleanness. Condemnation comes by willful disobedience; the penalty follows as the result. "Death" is the consequence.

Now, can our death in Adam in any sense whatever be the wages of sin? If so, then Christ is involved, for he died in Adam. If not, then our death in Adam will do us no harm, because Christ "died for the ungodly," and sin being forgiven, the penalty is awaited, and though we die in Adam, our life being "hid with Christ in God" we shall live again to die no more. But what of the rest of the dead? Do they remain dead as the wages of sin? That cannot be, for they are to be "brought forth" in the resurrection, not to life, but to "shame and everlasting contempt." Living to die no more is the reward of well doing. But the wages of sin is death. And now, since Jesus Christ, the Son of God, has died once for all, and for our sins, let all avail themselves of the glorious privilege of becoming sons of God, by adoption, and living forever with Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith, in the kingdom of God.

NO CONDEMNATION.

M. J. PRATT.

While conversing with a brother in Christ a few days since, he opened his Bible and commenced reading at the 8th chapter of Romans: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." As he read I began to see how important it is that we live very near the Lord in order to be ready for his coming, if we would meet him in peace. It seemed to me that I had never thought so much about it before, although I had read it many times. We must certainly live near to the Lord, and be willing to bear the cross, if we would have an abundant entrance into the kingdom at last. We must do nothing in which he cannot bless us, nor go anywhere, or engage in any amusements, however trifing, that we know Jesus cannot approve.

Without Jesus to help us we should be sure to fail, but by his grace assisting us, we may gain new strength every day. He is willing always to help us. No matter how wrong we may have done, we may go to him, and he will hear us and forgive us if we are really sorry for the wrong. But this is not a safe position to be in. What if the Lord should come at such a time and we be not ready, all because we thought there would be time enough to repent of our sins? But if we live near to Jesus, we may have no care or trouble about it; all will be well; there will be no condemnation. O what a blessed position to be in! I thank the Lord for this privilege, and it is the privilege of all who will come to Jesus to enjoy sweet peace and rest. We may not only enjoy it while in meeting, but it is constant, flowing continually from the great fountain; and so long a we look to Jesus and keep our eye on him, just so long we enjoy the peace which passeth all understanding.

Let us ask ourselves the question each day, Have I done anything in which I may not have God's approbation? Is there any condemnation? If there is we are not in Christ Jesus. Oh! let us see to it at once, get ready and keep ready, and all will be well. O sinner, if you only knew how good it is to serve the Lord, you would come now, believe and be saved, receive an hundred-fold in this life and an eternal home in that whinh is to come.

THOUGHTS ON MAN.

BY A BAPTIST.

(Concluded.)

Another ground of degrees of guilt, as applicable to different classes of the same order of beings, is clearly brought to view by Christ in Matt. 10: 15 and 11: 20–24. Are we to think, from any human standpoint, that the Sodomites were not guilty of viler conduct than simply refusing to entertain a stranger, who was a disciple of Christ? And are we to think that the inhabitants of Capernaum were as low and vile as were the inhabitants of Sodom? By no means. So then we are taught that man's guilt will not be measured so much by the act done, as by the circumstances under which it was done; and that the rejection of an offered Savior, under favorable circumstances, would be the crowning guilt, and as Christ was couscious while in the garden of the glory and happiness from which his death on the cross would, as a sin-offering separate him, so the gospel-enlightened sinner at the judgment will have a full view of the glory and bliss which he has willfully spurned and rejected, which will constitute as much anguish as it will be possible for a mortal being to endure—a consciousness which those who never heard of a Savior cannot have, and consequently will not endure that degree of suffering.

To the advocates and teachers of orthodox doctrine, I would express the same conviction that Paul did of Israel in Romans 10th chapter, believing that they have a zeal for God, but not in respect to the nature and destiny of man, "according to knowledge;" for going through a tortuous, circuitous, and untenable round of argument and exposition of terms to establish a theory introduced by the tempter to our common mother in the garden of Eden, when he said to her, "Ye shall not surely die; they have not submitted themselves to the plain declaration of God as recorded in his Word.

Should these thoughts be subjected to the criticism of any unbeliever in divine revelation, and by them regarded as a sort of license for the continuance in any course of wrong doing, thinking the penalty of such a course to be trifling, I would ask, What motive prompts you in any laudable act, either for your own benefit or the benefit of others? Is it the fear of punishment that would follow the wrong course? or is it the benefit and satisfaction accruing from following a right course of action? Then not by as much as you dread a miserable destruction, but rather by as much as you value an eternity of happiness (an unmeasurably higher motive), I ask you to give attention to the teaching of revelation, and, in view of its truths, accept the substitution of Christ, by being united to him by a living faith, both in regard to its intrinsic merits and its availability in your behalf.

In conveying my thoughts to another, they marvelously fail of the force with which they impress my own mind. To me they seem as perfectly adapted to clearly set forth God's love to man, not only in providing a way of salvation for him after he had sinned, but also in keeping the punishment for sin, terrible as it is; in keeping not only with the sinner's intelligence, but also with the holiness and nature of his government, so as to harmonize with the relations between God and man, as parent and child; as so addressed to man's intelligence in reference to the propriety of his accountability to the author of his being, that, if properly languaged and presented, they would be the strongest possible incentive that could be presented to his mind to induce him to accept the substitution of Christ, by faith in him as the only hope of escape from death, the penalty of the violated law; and as a result of that faith to practice the precepts taught by Christ, and by thus partaking the leaves of the gospel tree of life, be healed from all the maladies of sin, and so be prepared to partake of its fruits, which will be an eternal life, as perfect and complete in every thing desirable as an all-wise, holy, mighty, and mercifully loving Father could provide.

The faithful christian is mighty in unconscious power. His soul, as it gravitates towards God, impresses those with whom he may have to do. The silent life, the godly walk, the steadfast faith, the single-hearted service of a christian man, is more potent than the strife and babble of many a noisy tongue, that only proclaims the emptiness of the heart from which it speaks.

— Purity and perfection in an instrument insure its success. It is not great talents that God will bless, so much as great likeness to Jesus.

— If we were always abiding in Christ, because of his word abiding in us, our lives would be one succession of victories over temptation.

WORK FOR CHRIST.

Dear brethren in Christ, these are prophetic days,—a period into which are crowded wonderful events. The foundations of the deep are moved, the elements whirl and rush as if the dissolution of all things was at hand. Error is flooding the world and threatening the extermination of truth. Wickedness is trampling righteousness under its feet, and a premium is offered for oppression. The true Church is despised, and the world is ready to swallow her up, if the mighty One does not speedily come to her deliverance. It is the hour for rallying the forces of the faithful to the last charge upon the enemy.

In the name of the Lord we exhort every lover of Jesus to stand firmly at his post. Be loyal, and do your whole duty. Use every means within your reach to promulgate the sacred truths committed to your care. Speak privately and publicly; preach, pray, exhort, write, help the servant of God on his way, send the papers, laden with truth, to those in darkness. Scatter tracts and books! Help the poor and sick. Work! work! for the last hour has come—the last opportunity to work for Christ.

Take your pens, brethren and sisters, and write for our paper. Write upon stirring, vital questions; subjects that will warn, entreat, encourage, enlighten and stimulate to immediate and thorough preparation for the coming judgment.

Those who cannot write arguments, write letters;—short, spirited letters;—pour into them your hearts, your experiences of faith, hope, perfect love, consecration—the fruitage of a holy life—your prospects of deliverance and peerage with angels in the kingdom of God. Go to God in prayer, and ask for an inspiration to assist you in writing; for you need it in doing that christian duty.

We fear, dear brethren, that some of you will find at the judgment that you have not done all your duty in writing to publish the gospel, thinking that all is done in preaching. You could reach thirty thousand by an article in the Crisis, while you could address from one to five hundred in a sermon. We pray you, dear ones in Christ, arouse, and be earnest in this holy work; for the Judge standeth before the door. The curtain is about to fall. Stand at your post! Stirke once more for Christ, and soon all will be finished!

WHAT IS HOLINESS AND SANCTIFICATION?

Holiness is not an element or an attribute; but it is a state—a condition produced by the action of certain principles and the establishment of certain habits. It is not an an element which comes to us from a certain fountain, which we may retain or drive away as we do the Holy Spirit; but it is a personal, moral condition produced by the action of certain moral forces, and the application of certain spiritual principles.

Sickness and health are physical conditions. Peace and liberty are political conditions. Wealth and poverty are financial conditions. So holiness is a moral or religious condition.

As health results from the action of certain physical elements and certain habits of natural life, so holiness results from the action of moral elements and the habits of a religious life. Peace results from the presence of union and harmony, and the absence of strife and war; so holiness is produced by the absence of sin and the presence of loyalty to the Divine government.

Purity of heart and obedience to God is as positive proof of holiness as walking and talking are of physical life. A pure heart is one cleansed from moral pollution—sinless—and filled with principles approved of God and used for the purposes designed by him. Such a heart is holy, and upon it is written Holiness to the Lord.

This condition is produced by the application of the blood of Christ, cleansing from all sin, and the reception of the Holy Spirit, which gives faith in Gospel truth and prompts to perfect obedience to the Divine law. Such a christian condition and state we understand to be scripturally expressed by the word holiness.

The term sanctification as used in the Scriptures does not express a moral condition, but the character and application of moral acts. The moral character of acts is moulded by the moral condition of the actor. Sanctification implies employment—use. To be employed for a specific purpose; to accomplish a sacred object.

Christ sanctified himself; he employed himself for the accomplishment of a sacred object—the salvation of a lost world. So men are sanctified when they consent to be used as the Lord may be pleased to use them, as Christ did, to do whatsoever the Lord may reveal as his will.

Sanctification cannot precede or be separated from holiness; for sanctified acts cannot be produced without a holy heart. God will not accept man as his servant in an unholy state, or his acts as obedience to his law when proceeding from an impure heart.

As holiness is a state of loyalty and obedience to God, we cannot be holy without sanctification; therefore holiness and sanctification are inseparable in christian experience.

Sanctification is activity—specific action; action in perfect harmony with God's requirements. It is in christian life like the pulsation of the heart in physical life; we live while the heart throbs, so we live a sanctified life while we obey God. Sanctification is not an emotional experience produced by any external circumstances; but it is produced by an honest, earnest, hearty obedience to God, directed by the Word of God, and assisted by the Holy Spirit.

We understand that holiness and sanctification are absolutely essential for salvation, and we fear that many of the professed people of God are destitute of them, and will find at last, when it will be too late, that they are unsaved. Dear brethren, we earnestly exhort you to be careful and not be satisfied with superficial religion; for we must have pure hearts, made so by the application of Christ's blood, and be controled by the Holy Spirit, or we shall fail of eternal life.

A GOOD CONFESSION.

Bishop Foster, a man of letters and mind, a man whose faith can only rest on proof, and whose hope demands substantial evidence, has expressed what thousands have in silence experienced; viz., a yearning after satisfactory proof of man's future happy existence.

This question is momentous, and of infinite interest to every truly intelligent mind. We instinctively ask to look beyond the curtain of death, and learn from definite and unimpeachable testimony the truth relating to man's future life and condition. Witnesses in the case must be those who have been there and seen and known the facts, or a God, who has the power to foresee and bring to pass a certain condition, and is pleased to reveal it.

Bishop Foster has made a noble confession of his lack of confidence in all human testimony of heathen philosophers and uninspired religious teachers upon the subject. When death laid his cold hand upon the objects of his paternal love it left no cheering voice of triumph for the dead, no light to break the darkness of the tomb. All human and satanic assurances failed to comfort him mid the unbroken stillness and starless gloom of death. Interpreters of the Divine Oracles have followed the vain reasoning of philosophers, and made death the gate to endless joys, while God has made it the portal to "darkness" and "silence"—the "enemy" of man, the execution of a penalty.

With these facts before the critical eye of the bishop, it is no wonder that he refused to be comforted, and sought with agonizing yearnings substantial proof, God-given testimony, that the dead shall re-live, and reunions of death-divided ones shall be enjoyed.

He found the infinite prize at last;—the long-sought light from heaven came, flashing across the darkness of the tomb, sounding from the throne of the Infinite—"I am Jesus of Nazareth;" "thy dead men shall live."

O that all of our bishops, deacons, and laity might see that without hope in the resurrection of the dead our faith is vain and our preaching is also vain.

We quote from a sermon of the Bishop as follows:

ONLY IN CHRIST.

If Jesus Christ be not a messenger from beyond the grave, I repeat it, you will search in vain over all human experience, over all the learned utterances and thought of all the ages, for a solitary argument, for a single fact that gives hope to the human race. I was not used to believe this in my early ministry and early studies of this subject. I was impressed with the idea that even without a Bible there was more than ground for conjecture—there was some solidity in the argument.

I read with great avidity all the authors and all the books. I think there has been no book written on the immortality of the soul that I have not read—none of which I have any knowledge or ever heard of. I have pursued them, bought them at great prices, read them with great earnestness, seeking to construct a satisfactory theory to my own mind, seeking to master that great argument. I have spent thirty years at it, hoping some day that possibly by diligent study and prayerful earnestness I might be able to convey that argument, to present it with more force, and to make its impression upon the world. But when death came to my home and struck down my darlings, when I went and looked into their graves, I saw nothing but utter darkness.

I looked up into heaven with a hunger that I cannot describe, with an anguish that I cannot express. I went out on a dark night into the deep woods, and looked up into the great vault of heaven, and beat upon my breast, and cried to my Father above. . . . and prayed until my heart was crushed and broken, until my tears were exhausted and my tongue almost clave to the roof of my mouth; in speechless silence, with my face upon the earth, I listened, but I found that all was dark and silent; not a ray, not a voice.

I went and sat down by the philosophers that had edified me, and found that they gave me nothing but husks. I read their arguments that had once cheered me, but they broke my heart; they had nothing in them, not even enough for me to hang a conjecture upon. I was desolate with an utter desolation. I sat down and wrung my hands in agony that I could not describe, until I heard a voice coming through the gloom, and out of the darkness and silence, with more than heavenly sweetness and music in it, and it said, "I am Jesus of Nazareth; thy dead men shall live;" and upon that single idea, that single thought, I found that I could rest my hope and my faith, and upon no other. He has brought life and immortality to light; he has revealed that great doctrine; he has established a truth which the world sighed, and longed, and wept and prayed for, but which ever eluded them. . . .

I cannot pursue the discussion upon this thought. I say he has settled that question, so that it is no more a question of conjecture or hypothesis or debate, that "it is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

NEWS IN BRIEF.

There has been no important change in the Eastern war news during the week. The Powers have all agreed to send representatives to a Conference of the nations, designed to present articles of agreement between the parties at war so as to produce peace. The effort may result in war; no man knoweth; the external circumstances certainly make the decision extremely doubtful.

Our political home news is certainly very exciting, and to many minds dark and threatening. The two political parties have become so intensely irritated, that a single overt act by either, interpreted to mean a purpose to resort to the sword to settle the great national questions, would set the whole country in a blaze in a month. As a nation we are certainly standing over a mine of terrible explosives, liable to be ignited at any hour, producing such destructive and bloody scenes as our continent has never witnessed. He that cannot see this must be very blind to human history and human passions.

The strain upon good order and loyalty to government has been increasing more and more rapidly for the last thirty years and it seems to us cannot extend much further without a terrible rupture. May God in the abundance of his mercy give us a little more peace is our prayer.

Our Indian war news is brightening; four hundred lodges of Indians having surrendered to our army. The Indians surrendered five of their chiefs as hostages, guaranteeing their compliance with the conditions of the surrender.

Another famine is reported in India.

The Pope's Premier and great financier—Cardinal Antonelli—is dead. The Pope voluntarially left his self-constituted prison, for the first time for six years, and went into the Vatican to meet the Spanish pilgrims.

The French Cabinet has passed a crisis on the question of Comuunists' pardon, and retained its position without a rupture.

The great German Chancellor, Bismarck, is reported ill; his nervous system being seriously impaired, and fears are entertained of insanity.

"Calcutta,, Nov. 9. The district of Backerguage was ravaged by a cyclone on Tuesday last. A thousand native houses were destroyed.

The town of Dowlutkhan was submerged by a wave, and five thousand persons are believed to have perished. The Government has sent relief to the desolated section."

HOW IT IS DONE.

Spiritualists have made a great stir about the writing of spirits on slates and paper. Among those who have been noted in securing writing from the spirits is Dr. Slade. The following shows it is being found out how it is done:

"Slade, the spiritual medium, formerly well-known in New York, has gone to London and made such a sensation there with his specialty of spirit writings on a slate, that the British association for the advancement of science even went so far, after a discussion of the phenomenon, as to advise that it be investigated. But it wasn't necessary, for meanwhile a professor of zoology in London University and a leading physician had put their heads together and effectually disposed of Mr. Slade. Having arranged a plan, they contrived to snatch away the slate on detecting his hand in motion, and found a message written on it, and what was worse, this happened just when Slade was about to summon the spirits to do the writing in question."—Portland, (Me.) Press.

The veil of mystery is being removed from many of the strange slight-of-hand performances practiced by the Spiritual mediums. Let the light shine on the ways of darkness.

PURITY AND MATURITY.

It is sometimes said that when a person is pure he cannot grow any more. Those who speak thus make a great mistake. It might as well be said of a sick child, when it gets well it must stop growing. It should be kept in mind that we do not grow into purity, but we become pure by confessing and forsaking all our sins, and receiving pardon.

On the other hand, no one is pardoned into maturity. The growth is not from worse to better. It is an addition of quantity instead of quality. We grow in strength by adding more to what we already possess. We grow larger physically by a similar law. Trees grow larger, but the additions are the same in quality. If it is a beach or chestnut, the growth only makes it a larger beach or a larger chestnut tree. The one does not grow to be the other. A poison hemlock does not grow to be an apple tree, neither does a sinner grow into a saint. He must first be changed into "a new creature," then he may grow up to christian manhood.

If a man is a sinner, he grows as such; if a backslider, he grows in that condition; if he is a pure man, he grows larger and stronger, like the tree. He adds on more of the same quality, and thus increases the quantity.

If an unclean person grows, he is only a larger unclean being. It is more of the same kind. No one ever grew out of a single sin. So long as any sin remains, he is in an unjustified state, and only grows as a sinner. He cannot be a saint and a sinner at the same time. The one is the opposite of the other. If he is walking in the broad way, he is not in the narrow one that leads to life. He "cannot serve God and mammon. Whoever is in Christ is out of sin. "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." 1 John 3: 6. When in him, one is in a condition to grow as a christian. He is continually making additions to his patience, love, peace, faith, gentleness, long-suffering, and all the other fruits of the Spirit, by the constant exercise of these attributes. He must first be patient, before he can add thereto. Patience and impatience, sin and holiness, love and hatred, cannot be added to each other.

One must first be pure, before he can mature in purity. Growth does not change his nature. One does not become a christian by growth, but a stronger one; just as a man is stouter than a boy; yet the same kind of material that constituted the boy was added to make the man; the only difference being in the fact that there was more of the man than the boy. So, when one is made pure by faith in the blood of Christ, he may continue to grow as long as he lives. There is no limit; but the growth does not add to his purity. Every pure heart is free from sin, and can be no more than free. Purity has no degrees. When gold is pure it cannot be purer. It is then free from all alloy. The quantity may be increased, but not the quality. A child may be as clean as a man, and a young christian as pure as an aged saint. While multiplied years advance one towards maturity, they are not necessary to secure purity.

GOOD SENSE.

It often happens that some old grandmother will say more sensible things in five minutes than a fashionable lady will in a whole day. It is also well-known that aged mothers can endure more hardship than their daughters who are in the prime of life. Here is a little sensible talk from an old-fashioned woman writing in the Boston Watchman. When referring to some of the young girls, she says:

"I have found in the class-room that the girls who have the most on the outside of their heads have the least inside. Last summer I heard a fashionable young lady reading her graduating essay, earnestly demanding a 'wider sphere for women,' while her chest was so narrowed by artificial means that she could hardly read her essay. She evidently thought this whole world a 'pent up Utica' that was confining her powers; but all the poor girl needed was sufficient strength and purpose of character to free herself from the thraldom of fashion, and go to work in an earnest way to bring nearer to Christ the world she had found so much out of order. Some of you, my dear girls, may be filled with 'infinite longings' for a career. Let me tell you that what our sex most need at present is women who, unembarrassed by fashionable drapery, can walk a few miles without being tired—women whose thinking powers are not injured, who find a 'career' in earnestly doing their Master's work, however homely it may be."

PENCIL POINTS.

I. I. LESLIE.

Putting off—Putting on. There are some things which should be put off, never to be put on; and there are others that should be put on, never to be put off. It is both hard to put off and to put on these things. The putting off must precede the putting on; both classes of things cannot be worn at the same time. The things to be put off are unbecoming, vain and filthy. The things to be put on, comely, holy and pure. Which have you on, dear reader? Have you put off the former, and put on the latter? Have you kept off what you laid off? Are you keeping on what you put on? See Eph. 4: 22. Col. 3: 8, 9. Rom. 13: 14. Eph. 4: 24. Col. 3: 10, 12, 14.

Looking. Many look after others, when they should look after themselves. They look after straight paths for other feet to walk in, and walk in crooked ones themselves. It is easier to look than to go. The beam (not of light) in our own eye, does not seem to hinder our looking for a mote in the eye of another. Looking two ways at the same time is not the best way to see clearly what we would behold. Looking both earthward and heavenward bedims the eye of faith. Some obey the command, and look not upon their own things as much as they do upon the things of others—with a covetous eye. Some look for money more than they look for souls. Many look for a home both on earth and in heaven, and prefer the one here. Many look to the pit from whence they were digged, and leap back into it. Few look to Jesus and live.

One way. If you are a preacher and wish to visit relatives or friends at a distance, or go to the Centennial, sit right down with a Railroad Guide before you, and write out a list of appointments to preach on the way thither. Send this list to the good paper that is read by those on whom you wish to call, that they may know beforehand you are coming, so they can give out your appointment, and be ready to receive you. Sending your appointments to the paper to be published free, will save you the expense and trouble of writing to each of the churches, or some lone brother where you wish to stop and rest and preach. The publication of your appointments will also let the people at large know that you are in the field, and can be sent for to go to any point. What if the brethren grumble a little at your thrusting yourself upon them, and say that your appointment interferes with their meeting arrangements and finances, they will nevertheless receive you with kindness, and out of respect for your feelings and calling, come out to hear you; and then—passing around the hat or box, "help you on, after a godly sort." When you wish to return home, do the same thing, only be sure to take another route back. This is one way to have it cost nothing, or at least but very little.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

J. J. SMITH'S REPORT FROM ALA.

Dear Brethren:—Since my last report I have been constantly in the field on a tour down the Coosa River country. I left home four weeks ago, without rest, at the close of our interesting meeting at home, which I mentioned in my last report. Bro. W. W. Livingston, of Gaylesville P. O., Ala., whose labors among us have been blest abundantly the last three months, set out with me for our first appointment.

For three weeks Bro. L. and I have traveled together. We preached two days near Bro. Lea's, and baptized him, his sister-in-law, and daughter. We organized Liberty Church with seventy persons who are willing to suffer reproach for Christ. Among these are eleven persons by the name of Cordell.

Among the number who came into the organization, is a minister who had already discarded creeds for the Bible. I mean Eld. J. J. Cordell, now of Valley Head, P O., Decalbe Co., Ala. Who will send him the Crisis, or any books or tracts for his own use, or for distribution? "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."

Bro. Livingston and myself have visited families, school-houses, and, in some instances, churches, and have preached privately and publicly as we have had opportunity. Some communities have been very kind to us, giving us a good hearing and their kind hospitalities. Others have been more reserved, and some have even shown unmistakable evidence of opposition, complaining of those who had received us into their churches.

I find that the Baptists, in their Association down here, have advertised us in their minutes to thousands by their harsh resolutions. This shuts us out of their houses of worship, but creates a curiosity to hear us, and the people turn out to the school-house or private dwellings, many of which are thrown open to us. I have not time now to write much that might interest. I have appointments for to-day and to-morrow, which will bring me to the first quarterly meeting of the Southern A. C. Conference, at Liberty Hill, Cherokee Co., Ala. I hope in ten days more to see my dear family, one of whom is in poor health. Pray for me and mine. Yours till Jesus comes.
J. J. SMITH.

AN AWFUL FACT.

In the Presbyterian of Sept 23d, under the caption, "No Conversions," an editorial article appears, in which we find the remarkable statement, that one thousand five hundred churches of their denomination for the last year report not a single addition to the roll of communicants. The force of this melancholy declaration is somewhat broken by the fact, that about one-third of these made no report at all. It is to be hoped, if they had all reported, the showing would not have been quite so unfavorable. But only think of fifteen hundred churches, in one of the most vigorous denominations in the country, without one addition to their roll of communicants for one year! We wish to make no improper use of this frank, though discouraging utterance. How much better to be honest enough to avow the truth, than to make such efforts, as we have known to be made, to simply keep up appearances?

We know not how many denominations would make a similar showing, if they would be ingenuous enough to clearly state the real facts of the case? It is a long time since we read an article in a religious newspaper, which caused us as much regret as this. We wish that the effort of the editor of the Presbyterian to partially do away the impression his statement made on our mind, had been more successful. But alas! the fact, with all its gloomy associations, stands out prominently. The remedy suggested is a good one. We hope it will everywhere be applied. True, the church needs a mighty and overcoming baptism—a baptism of fire and power. The world is perishing—rushing headlong to ruin and ripening for impending doom. Yet how little we can do, nay, how much we do, and yet how little is accomplished? Will the church take the alarm, and "awake and put on her strength?" We hope she will—Christian Standard.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

Were there ever a people more responsible before God than we? If any, where were they? Certainly no class of men in any generation were so enlightened, so favored with all the means of knowing and understanding the purposes and work of God as ourselves. Light from heaven has shone upon us as upon no other people since the race of man began. Patriarchs, prophets and apostles would gladly have lived here, and in addition to the light which they had, beheld the things that we see. If upon them there was laid a great responsibility, surely upon us there rests a greater. While they had messages from God for the people, and were charged with the responsibility of delivering them faithfully, we have one which is as great as any that God ever before gave to men to proclaim. Surely the last message of God to the world must be as important as any preceding it. If this be the culmination of the gospel of Christ to lost men, surely the work, being final, must be done as faithfully as any before it. The closing up of Gods great work by his people cannot be less, nor of less importance than the beginning; and if those first sent by him to commence the work were held responsible for the execution of that which they were commanded to do, surely they who are called upon to finish the work are equally responsible for its completion.

If the prophets and apostles were required to do all they could in extending the message which was given them to proclaim, and their own safety and salvation depended upon their faithfulness to God's requirement, shall we be held less responsible in the declaration of this message of warning which God requires us to deliver to the world? If it was required of them to sacrifice as they did, and to testify to the truth at the loss of all things, can we reasonably suppose there is less required of us, living where we do, with the light we have, and the doom of the whole world about to be witnessed? And do we believe this? Have we really the faith we profess to have? Do we at all feel the dread responsibility under which we are placed? Are we not as a people denying the profession of our faith? Are we not as a body insensible to the awful responsibility lying upon us? Are we not greatly unlike prophets, apostles and the faithful in other ages, in the execution of our great mission to this perishing world? This terrible responsibility; would to God we could feel it! The greatness and importance of our mission and work; O that we could comprehend and realize them! And shall we not before the time passes in which our great work must be done? Are we to go on and come to the judgment in this condition of insensibility to our high calling and great sacrifice? Can we be ready to "enter in" while our self-denial and work remains incomplete and undone?

It may be that we, as a body, shall never comprehend the vast responsibility to which God holds us; but it must be that some in the body will feel this, and be acting in view of it when the judgment begins. Should we not as a people try to measure and comprehend our responsibility? What an accountability is ours, to whom is given this great light, message and work, the closing and last warning to a perishing race! Our calling, our position, our work! How high, how exalted, how glorious! May God help us to see it.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. L. Stevens.

Dear Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad:—It is sometime since I wrote an article for the Crisis. I have been unwell, and my eyes have so failed me that I shall have to stop reading my Bible, which you know will be a trial. At times, I dare not look at print. You must all pray that the Lord may heal his humble servant. How bad it must have been with poor blind Bartimeus! If my eyes fail much, I shall have to employ an amanuensis.

I preach and scatter tracts. I do not think very many people about here pray much, they are so full of politics. It seems like nonsense to me to see men, called "men of God" spending time and breath with Satan's host. "Yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." The righteous shall have the whole earth in a few more days, or months, at most. So I am very well satisfied that the present rulers shall soon "be as though they had not been." From the present outlook of Europe, especially Turkey, it seems that God's people should remember the words of our last Prophet, Luke 21: 25–28. We further see the sad affirmation of the angel being fulfilled, Dan. 12: 10.

When I read of the condition of Turkey, and turn to Dan. 11: 45, and 12: 1–4, my heart feels light. I hope we shall soon see Jesus coming with the clouds of heaven, and all the holy angels with him, to give rewards to his people and to destroy them that destroy the earth. I have no special desire to see the wicked destroyed, but as I cannot enter into the joy of the Lord until then, I long to see the time.

The world is ripening fast for eternity. If we would do anything for the perishing ones, let us do it quickly. We stand on the edge of the river, and soon we shall pass over if we are worthy. Let as many as are able, try to save some before that awful day of God Almighty. As I pass through the streets of this town and hear the bitter swearing, from men and boys, and reflect on the time when God will come to have a just settlement with them, troubled am I for them. But they seem to be in cheer. So were the antediluvians, the Sodomites, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem; but all know who read the Bible and history what became of them.

The destruction of these places should never be forgotten. Sodom is set before us for an example, Jude, 7: 8. The people in this part of the land spend very little of their time reading the Bible. One man advised me not to read too much. He had read the Bible some, he said, but thought it best to let it be as much as possible. I have a very hard time to get the people to reason with me, as the Lord demands through his Word; I mean, to get them to read God's words, which are not in harmony with common ideas. I think I shall get a minister at this place to believe what God has said, instead of some earthly divine. There are too many sects of Christians, or Christian professors here. We have three divisions of Baptists, three of Methodists, one Congregational church, one Presbyterian, one Episcopal, and one Roman Catholic. You can see what a mixture we have.

The Hard-Shell, or Iron-side Baptists teach that God will save only one class of people, and that class were saved before Adam was made. So they teach that whatever God wants one of his chosen ones to do, he will inform him of at the right time. No seeking is needed at all, with them. If people who have no education taught such a doctrine as this I should not wonder, but those that we call educated, who have had the advantage of attending schools, lead in such nonsense. For their sin will I send them strong delusion, that they might believe a lie and be damned." Pray for me. The Lord be with you all.

Goldsboro, N. H., Box 204.

From E. O. Dinsmore.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—We are a people claiming to be called of God to proclaim his last message to a dying world; and what condition are we in? We profess to believe the end of all things is at hand, yet how many of us are holding on to those things which, if our theory is true, are so little needed. If Jesus is coming so soon, why be hoarding up the things of this world for our children, or a time of need?

It seems to me that but few Adventists realize that they are stewards of God. They forget that if they use the earthly things in their possession to gratify the lusts of the flesh, or the pride of the eye, instead of using them to advance his cause, they will be found wanting. The master will call them to account for their stewardship, and when he asks why was not this which thou hadst given to advance my cause on the earth, instead of being used for thy own gratification, what will you say? Jesus' first instruction to you was, if you will be my disciple, deny thyself. O how much this is forgotten! Some indulge in smoking, others in fine houses, fine clothes and luxurious living. How sad to see a people professing to believe the Lord's coming at hand, and indulging in such things, and doing so little to try to warn their fellow men of their danger!

O let us be consistent! Let us make our faith and works correspond. Jesus is truly soon coming. This is not fancy but eternal reality. Let us try and realize it, and be fully prepared for his coming, with our lamps trimmed and burning, and our vessels filled with oil. Seeing we look for such things what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness.

Wherefore, beloved, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless, the children of God in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye shine as lights in a dark place. May God help us, and he will do his part if we do ours.

From Bro. Seth Woodruff.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—Having seen no report from our Secretary of the Campmeeting held near Plainville, I write a few lines for the cheer of those who were not permitted to enjoy the yearly feast. My companion says that since the Springfield meeting she is anxious to get the Crisis, that she may learn of the meeting.

I will write a few words about the Connecticut Campmeeting. We think it the best meeting that we were ever permitted to enjoy upon that ground. The first Sabbath God's faithful servants were at their post, and the truth was listened to with interest. The prayer meetings were kept up in the large Mission tent morning and evening during the week. The deepest interest prevailed. The prayer meetings were excellent. Many requested prayers, backsliders were reclaimed and sinners converted. Some were to have been baptized, but at a late hour we found that the dry season had destroyed our place of baptism. Our new seats added much to the pleasure and comfort of all who came to hear the word of life.

Our preaching brethren came from various directions with ready hearts to preach the Word. Quietness and peace prevailed during the meeting. The last Sunday was a fine day, and a large number of people assembled. We trust that when the Son of Man shall come in his glory many will be saved as the result of that meeting. Many of the dear brethren were not permitted to enjoy the feast; but let me say to such, be faithful sentinels. The King is coming soon to crown the faithful. A few more days, and sickness, sorrow, pain and death will have fled forever; and upon those glorious fields of Eden we will raise a shout to the King of heaven. The warfare will be ended, the victory gained.

From H. S. Webster.

Bro. Editor:—Not long since an Orthodox minister, preaching in our neighborhood upon the second coming of Christ, remarked that it was wicked to pray for the Lord to come; and looking upward exclaimed, "O Lord, thou couldst not destroy the earth now in its age of wonderful improvements!"

Is it true that the mass of professing christians are adverse to the coming of their best friend, and trying to discourage the few that believe?

How many times you hear words like these, "it will not come in your day." I may not live to see the day of the Lord, but I can say, for one, that I am looking, longing and desiring that glorious day to come.

I believe the inspired Word of God encourages every believer in his desire for the advent of our Savior. When we see the signs of his advent near we are to "rejoice." We are to look and long for the return of the Nobleman. This is our hope. It sustains us amid all the trying scenes of life. How could we endure the trials of the way without this glorious hope of seeing Jesus and being made like him?

The church has long sat in sackcloth and mourned for the return of the Bridegroom. The household of faith have long desired the return of their Lord. We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened, desiring that mortality might be swallowed up of life. This is the hope of the suffering, sorrowing ones to-day. How it cheers our hearts, dear waiting pilgrims, to hear that "Jesus is coming."

Then let us take courage and press our way onward amid opposing elements on every hand. For that day will surely come, though the world does not desire it. It will not tarry, and we are to pray for patience to wait. But while we desire to see Jesus so much, we will try also to have others get ready.

Arvonia, Osage Co., Kansas.

From Sr. Maria L. Watson.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I still love the truth of God as it is recorded in his blessed Word. Many are turning their ears from the truth, and being turned unto fables. Iniquity abounds and the love of many is waxing cold. But let us who are looking for the Master's return, stick to truth, obey God in all things, and do his will.

Truly the Scriptures are fast fulfilling. Soon Jesus will come to make up his jewels. I want to be saved then. I made up my mind some time ago to separate myself from the world, with all its follies, pleasures and fashions, and take up my cross and follow Jesus. But I find it crossing sometimes. It is only by the grace of God that I can deny myself. But I read in his Word that unless we take up our cross and follow him we cannot be his disciples. I truly want to be one of God's humble children that will be saved when Jesus shall come. But I acknowledge that I am sinful by nature, and weak in the blessed cause of Christ. I am nothing of myself, but I know that my heavenly Father is able and willing to save me. The invitation is free to all. Whosoever will may come. Oh! how blessed it is to the poor sinner. I know it was a blessed promise to me when out of Christ. Dear sinner, accept the great and precious promise that is given you, and seek Jesus before it is too late. Life, through Christ, is what I am striving for. I do not expect to get it in any other way.

The promise is given to them only that believe on him, and are faithful to the end. I mean to trust him who is able to save me. I am now deprived of many privileges which I once enjoyed of meeting with those of like precious faith, but I have the Bible on which my faith is founded. That is the best of all. It shines brighter and brighter, and will unto the perfect day. I desire an interest in the prayers of God's children, that I may obey the Master in all things and be saved with all the dear saints in the kingdom. May God bless and save the perishing is my humble prayer.

Rome, Me.

From Sr. M. A Seymour.

Dear Crisis:—My mind is much stirred at this time by reading the letters from Brn. Cargile, and J. C. and S. E. Smith., in your issue of Oct. 25th. How many denials of home comforts, how much exposure to inclement weather and actual storms, how many times no house is found where pilgrims can rest, until nature is so weary that if the team could fast, the tired preacher would lie down by the road side, rather than ask and be refused again. Such ones can sing, "Here is no rest," and feel it down deep in the heart, while they sigh for rest eternal. I know whereof I write, having spent six years in this country, when it was very new, in continual public labor, without keeping house or having any home. But such sacrifices and privations are recorded on high, and our father knows all about these things and he will reward those who suffer with him, at his coming reign and glory.

I have often thought that I wished those brethren and sisters who are well to do in the world, have homes of comfort, and can remain quietly in them, and never seem to even guess the meaning of the word sacrifice for Christ's sake, had to take upon themselves all the duties, all the privations of the minister of such an unwelcome message as ours is, for one year, and really believe they must continue in this way for many years, or else bear their part in sustaining the Lord's servants and handmaids in the ministry. In my opinion at the end of the year the Lord's treasures would be well filled with voluntary contributions from those who rather stay at home than "go preach."

Reading, Mich.

From Bro. Geo. W. Brown.

Dear Brethren:—Thinking you would like to know how we are getting along, I will say that we have had a very sick time since the Etna Campmeeting. On our return home my wife was taken with typhoid fever; and after battling with the disease for two weeks it attacked her lungs and threw her into typhoid pneumonia, which was very severe. But with God's blessing and steady, persevering faith, she got up in five or six weeks so as to be around some. I started to fill my appointments, and when I reached Fitchburg I received a dispatch saying she was bleeding at the lungs. She is better now, but is still in a very critical state. We hope she may be raised up by the mercy of God. Brethren, pray for us, that our faith fail not, but that we may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Address me at Orrington, Maine. Your brother in affliction and in hope.

From Bro. J. Clifford.

Dear Bro. Couch:—It does seem to me that the nations are about to engage in the last great struggle, when the Turk "will come to his end, and none to help him;" and when Michael will stand up," and all of God's people will be delivered,—every one whose name is written in the book of life. The things you have been preaching and writing about I think are coming, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of those things which are coming on the earth. Not so with those who love Christ's appearing. They are calm and composed; their trust is in the Lord that made heaven and earth. They will say when he comes, This is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us. The campmeetings did me much good. May we watch and keep our garments.

Bangor, Me.

From Sr. M. J. Whitney.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I love the Crisis, the coming of Christ and kindred doctrines. I am still striving, God helping me, to press my way onward towards that rest which remains for his people. The past year has been one of trial and temptation with me, but my faith in God is unwavering, and I feel that it is good to trust in him always and to pray without ceasing. For he leadeth me to the green pastures and by the still waters. He will lead in the right way, will guide aright and save in the coming kingdom.

In Spain the Protestants are stated to be in much anxiety and even peril, according to information communicated to the Spanish and Portuguese Church Missions from private sources.

Married.

GROVER—BROWN. In East Walpole, Mass., by Elder L. Boutell, at the residence of the bride's father, William H. Grover, of Lynn, Mass., and Miss Sarah Brown, of East Walpole.

SMITH—BROWN. Also at the same time and place, Porter J. Smith, of Canton, Mass., and Miss Nancy E. Brown, of East Walpole, Mass.

LAMPREY—ROSENS. In Rye, N. H., Nov. 4th, 1876, by Eld. C. E. Hurd, Mr. Jonathan G. Lamprey, of Hampton, N. H., and Miss Annie Rosens, of Boston, Mass.

LEAVITT—FARREL. In Rye, N. H., Nov. 4th, 1876, by Elder C. E. Hurd, Mr. George O. Leavitt, of Hampton, N. H., and Miss Ellen Farrel, of Boston, Mass.

Obituaries.

Ransom.—In North Carver, Mass., Oct. 15th, 1876, of rheumatism of the heart, Deacon Levi Ransom, aged sixty-nine years.

Bro. R. had been complaining for about two weeks. We were called about two hours before his death. He was suffering severely. While Sister R. came into the adjoining room to see if it was time to give the medicine, she heard a groan, and all was over. He died in his rocking-chair. There was a heavenly smile on his face. His work was done. His death is a heavy blow on all, but more especially on the church.

Not a few of the poor preaching brethren will remember his hospitality; and many of the readers of the Crisis who are accustomed to attend Tremont Campmeeting will see his face no more "until the day break and the shadows flee away."

His life was fragrant with love and usefulness. He leaves an only brother, a saintly wife, several children, and a multitude of friends who mourn deeply their loss. Sermon by the writer from Job 14: 14, 15, assisted by Bro. W. S. Smith from Philadelphia. J. R. Boynton.

Roundy. In Stockbridge, Vt., Sept. 13th, '76, by hanging, Truman A. Roundy, aged fifty-four years.

For a number of years the deceased lived a christian life, and had the confidence of neighbors and friends up to the time of his death. He was in possession of good health, and his surroundings were generally pleasant. He enjoyed the society of christians, and the Sabbath preceding his death he bore testimony for Christ and his word. His home has ever been a home for the servants of God, the pleasantness of which the writer has himself enjoyed. He proved his love for God and his Word, not only by words, but by deeds. He leaves a wife, two sons, and other relatives who deeply mourn his death. We commend them to God, who comforteth us in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. Services attended by the writer. A. Damon.

Bowers. In Danielsonville, Conn., Oct. 20th, 1876, Emma, daughter of Calvin and Eliza Bowers, in the nineteenth year of her age.

When quite young she gave her heart to the Savior. Recently she renewed her covenant vows to the Lord, and in conference and prayer meetings cheered the hearts of God's saints by her testimonies and songs of praise. While on her sick bed, expressions of gratitude to God in forgiving all the past and giving her an assurance of her acceptance with Christ were most cheering. She viewed death as an enemy, yet she submitted all into the hands of the Lord, and bade her friends good bye, with the request to meet her on the shores of immortality. May father, mother, brothers and sisters all be ready to meet her in the kingdom. Words of comfort were spoken by E. Bellows. N. Shumway.

Coats. In Watertown, N. Y., Oct. 27th, Sr. Nancy Coats, aged eighty-eight years.

Sister Coats was a mother in Israel. She loved the appearing of Jesus, and delighted in the contemplation of future joys and immunities in the new earth. The doctrines that distinguish us as Bible christians found a large place in her heart, and she was always free to speak of a Savior's love for dying mortals. After a long life of toil and suffering she has gathered up her feet in death, and sweetly sleeps in Jesus, like a shock of corn fully ripe, waiting for the day of harvest. May God bless her surviving children and grandchildren, and help them to trust in Him who is "the resurrection and the life." Words of comfort by the writer. C. H. Williams.

Bingham. In Martinsburg, N. Y., Oct. 28th, Sister Emily Bingham, aged seventy-three years.

Death has taken from our midst one beloved by all who knew her. For some months previous to her death disease and infirmities rendered her condition very uncomfortable, but Jesus and his Word was her support. She loved to hear God's Word dispensed in its purity, and sustained the gospel as far as her limited means would allow. She is resting from her labors, and waiting for the glorious transformation to be experienced in the resurrection. Sermon by the writer. H. C. Williams.

Barrows. In Bridgewater, Vt., Nov. 3d, '76, Priscilla Barrows, widow of Geo. Barrows, aged eighty-two years.

Sister Barrows was a highly esteemed citizen, an intelligent christian, and a faithful, devoted and affectionate mother. Her loss is deeply felt by many relatives. For over fifty years she has been a follower of Christ, and when the cry was given, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" Sister Barrows united with us as a people looking for Christ. She leaves behind to mourn her loss six daughters and one son; may their mourning be turned into joy when all the saints are gathered to the deathless land. I. Y. Briggs.

Hodgdon. In Wheelock, Vt., Oct. 14th, Sr. Abbie Hodgdon, aged forty-seven years.

Our dear sister in Christ has long enjoyed that especial salvation which only believers have. She was looking forward to that salvation which is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ. During her long illness she often said, "Eternal life is what I want." Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Matt. 13: 28: "An enemy hath done this." J. H. Smith.

Smith. In Wheelock, Vt., Oct. 21st, Asa H. Smith, aged sixty-nine years.

My father was born in Holderness, N. H. He was converted in 1842 during a protracted meeting, held by Eld. I. H. Shipman at North Danville. Since that time he has lived a consistent christian life, and he died in the triumph of faith. Words of comfort were spoken by Eld. G. H. Wallace from Job: "If a man die, shall he live again?" J. H. Smith.

Goutermout. In Harrisburg, N. Y., Sept. 25th, Mrs. Deborah Goutermout, aged about seventy-three years.

The subject of this notice will be greatly missed in the community where she resided, for she was a friend to all. Many times has the writer shared her hospitality. Only a few months previous to her death we preached the funeral sermon of her son. But death was not satisfied until mother was stricken. May the gospel hope cheer the mourning ones. Sermon by the writer. C. H. Williams.

ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES.

This is an ably conducted weekly paper, edited by Elder Frank Burr, and published under the auspices of the Western A. C. Publishing Society. It gives prominence to the personal coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of sinners, and the eternal salvation of saints on the renovated earth. It also insists on a holy life as essential to an admittance into the coming kingdom. $2.20 a year. Address Advent Christian Times, 91 South Green St., Chicago, Ill. The World's Crisis and Adv. Chris. Times sent postpaid to subscribers who will take both, at the reduced rate of $4.00 per year in advance for both papers. Address World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Notices.

Notice.—The Philadelphia Advent Christian Conference will hold its semi-annual session in Philadelphia, Pa., at the Advent Christian Church, Eighth Street, above Noble, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is earnestly requested that all preachers and churches within the limits of this Conference will be represented at these meetings, either personally, by letter, or delegates. We want to hear from all, that we may know what is being done for the spread of gospel truth. All letters of communication to be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street.

Wm. Ashman, President.
E. King, Secretary.

Notice.—The New York State A. C. Conference will hold its semi-annual session with the church at East Shelby, Monroe Co., N. Y., commencing Thursday, Nov. 30th, and hold over the following Sabbath, Dec. 3d. Teams will meet the train at Knowlesville, and convey all that come to Shelby. Knowlesville is on the New York Central Niagara Falls branch. Homes will be provided for all who come. Brethren and sisters, come in the name of the Lord to work for Jesus and advance his blessed cause. We hope to see a large representation of ministers and delegates at this meeting, as we have had no campmeeting this year in this State. Let all make a sacrifice to come.

M. R. Miles.
J. E. Wells.

Notice will be given in time what trains to take.

Vermont Quarterly Conference.—The next session of the Vermont Conference will be holden at St. Johnsbury, commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 12th, and continue as long as the Lord will. Pray, brethren, and sacrifice to come and work for sinners. Come from afar, and heaven will bless you. A. A. Hoyt, Conf. Elder.

Protracted Meeting.—If the Lord will, a Protracted Meeting will be held in the meeting-house at Upper Bartlett, N. H., Wednesday evening, Dec. 13th, and over Sunday, Dec. 17th. Bro. J. B. Deering will be with us to assist in proclaiming the Word. A cordial invitation is extended to all the waiting ones in this locality.

E. S. Moulton, Committee.

A Card.

Having returned from my Western tour, I would say to those who may have claims upon me for labor promised before going West, I am now ready to labor as the door may be opened.

Hyde Park, Nov. 10th. T. M. Preble.

Quarterly Conference.—The Fourth Meeting of the New Hampshire A. C. Conference will be held with the Church in Rye, N. H., commencing Thursday, Nov. 23d, 1½ p. m., and hold over Sunday, Nov. 26th. We hope there will be a general gathering in the name of the Lord, therefore we extend a cordial invitation to all, both ministers and people, to come with the whole armor on to work with the Lord.

Com.: N. Wheeler, C. E. Hurd, C. H. Fletcher.

Notice.—The next meeting of the East Maine Second Advent Christian Missionary Association, for gospel labor, will be held with the church at Rockland, commencing Nov. 16th, at 7 o'clock p. m., and hold over Sunday, and as much longer as thought best. Let preachers and others come prepared to work for the salvation of sinners. Call on A. C. Worth and Stephen Clark.

J. Carr, for the Committee.

Notice.—A protracted meeting will commence at Water Village, N. H., Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue as long as may seem duty. Brn. G. F. Haines and M. Stevens are expected to be present and assist in preaching the Word. Brethren and sisters from abroad will be heartily welcomed. Ample provision will be made for man and beast. C. H. Sweet.

Conference.—The Third Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church, known as the Washington County Conference, is hereby called to meet with the Church at Sherman Centre, Washington Co., Kansas, on Friday evening, Dec. 1st, at 6.30 p. m., and hold over Sunday. We expect a goodly number of preaching brethren to be present. There will be business of importance to transact, and it is hoped every church will be represented by properly accredited delegates. Homes will be provided for all who come. Sherman is in south side of county. J. W. Hayworth, Pres.

Notice.—At the last annual meeting of the Vermont Conference, a resolution was passed to encourage the churches to take up collections once in four weeks to aid the State Missionary work. Let this work be attended to.

H. B. Quimby, Recorder.

Notice.—The Second Annual session of the York County A. C. Conference will be held in the Second Advent Chapel at Biddeford, Me., commencing Thursday, Dec. 7th, at two o'clock p. m. A full attendance is desired.

D. W. Davis.

Those wishing to preach in Bridgewater, Vt., please correspond with J. Y. Briggs before publishing appointments.

Attention All, Please!

I have a proposal to make. Who will help in this matter? Several important facts have come to my knowledge, which leads me to make the following offer. With gratitude to God I learn that the "History of the Second Advent Message" has been put into several college and seminary libraries, where the results are clearly manifest in awakening some of the "faculty" and students to investigate and become especially interested in the doctrine of Christ's coming and kindred truths. They express surprise that such an amount of mission work has been done in this form, and such men of known ability and piety engaged in it while they were ignorant of it. It has also fallen into the hands of several ministers of different churches, where the results are the same. I am convinced that much good can be done by awakening such men as stand in the front of society. I want to sacrifice some to help it along. It is now the special season to make gifts to friends for two months to come. The retail price of the History is $3.50. Postage is now 20 cts. on each. The actual cost of the book to me in publishing was $3.00 each. I now offer one hundred copies of it to be ordered before Jan. 1st, 1877, to any persons who will order to give to libraries of Institutions, or other public libraries, or who will keep them to lend to ministers and other readers, or who will give them to ministers, for $2.50 each, postpaid. No others should expect them at this price, as it is 70 cts. less than cost on each. Address all such orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and endurance. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per one hundred, or 15 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are anxious, perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of the nations. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 30 cts. per dozen, by mail.

Address I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

☞ For sale as above at the Crisis Office.

Appointments

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following Resolution was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass.

Spur and Encouragement to the Study of the Greek of the New Testament. 18 cts.

Christianity, and its Relation to Judaism. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts.

Tracts.

We have for some time been unable to supply orders for some of the following Tracts, which are so well suited for plentiful distribution; but have now a large quantity on hand. It will be seen too that there are many new ones in the list.

A very old Sermon, preached in England fifteen hundred years ago. It teaches that we go to Christ "after our resurrection." Old style of spelling. Three copies, postpaid, 10 cts.

The New Jerusalem: Poetry, a Criticism, and Scripture. By W. Kellaway. Envelope size. Enamelled wrapper. Six for 25 cts.

"Thy Kingdom Come!" or, the Kingdom of God not yet established on the Earth. By W. Kellaway. Same style as the foregoing. Six for 25 cts.

The Deep Importance of the Re-standing from the Dead. By R. Ashcroft, Congregational Minister, England. Six copies for 40 cts.

Chaos, Kosmos, The Kingdom of Darkness and the Kingdom of God. By E. White, M. A. Our Earth's history from beginning to end. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

Who Art Thou that Judgest? A Letter addressed to one, but applicable to many. By Joseph Stratford, Minister of the Gospel. A Rebuke with Doctrine of such as are cruel in their treatment of Christians holding life in Jesus. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

Scriptural Doctrine of a Future Life. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 50 cts.

Life Everlasting. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 25 cts.

Dialogue between a Predestinarian and his Friend. A lot of valuable extracts. 12 copies for 25 cts.

Life and Death. Extract from Archbishop Whateley's "Future Life." 20 copies for 25 cts.

Immortality. Extracts from numerous authors on Life and Immortality by the Lord Christ. By H. Constable, M. A. Enlarged by Bro. W. Kellaway. 20 copies for 25 cts.

Immortality only in Christ. A concise presentation of the truth stated in its title, in twenty-three paragraphs and extracts from Fathers. 20 copies for 25 cts.

The Undesirableness of Death. By D. T. Taylor. With "Death and Immortality," by W. Kellaway. 20 copies for 25 cts.

The four Tracts immediately preceding are very valuable, and we have some thousands in hand to meet demands.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. A'gt

BE A MAN.

Lean not weakly upon others
When the evil days draw nigh;
But erect, 'mid luckier brothers,
Face the worst with fearless eye.

Strength from sorest trials borrow,
Meet e'en slander undismayed;
In the crucible of sorrow
Sterling manhood is assayed.

Fate confront with nerve redoubled,
Never falter in the strife;
Think an angel may have troubled,
For your good, the pool of life.

Pray for aid in all misfortune,
But still labor while you pray;
For the God whom you importune
From the slothful turn away.

Be no sordid faction's chattel,
Wrong, whate'er its name, attack;
Fall, if worsted in the battle,
With Truth's harness on your back.

Judge not erring man or woman
Harshly, in self-righteous pride,
Since to blot out errors human
He, the Pure and Perfect, died.

So employ your time and talents,
Working out your Maker's plan,
That, when weighed in the great balance,
Heaven may claim you as a MAN.

Selected by J. B. RICHARDS.

A VOYAGE ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

WM. KELLAWAY.

Alongside of Pier 35, North River, New York, on the 11th of October, lay the stout, iron clad steamer "Hindoo," of the Wilson Line of steamships—the same vessel that we crossed in on our voyage to the States. For the reasons that we gave in a former letter—her good table, the civility of her officers, and the evident desire to ensure the comfort of passengers—we had chosen her for our return trip. So, just before noon, we were on board, ready for the start. The last of her cargo was being put in, and we saw her holds packed with goods to their utmost capacity. Soon a shrill whistle told us that we were about to move, and a few minutes afterward, with the help of a river tug, we cleared from the dock and started for home.

Home! how sweet the word! Abroad, there had been both attractions and delights. Abroad we had enjoyed many mercies and privileges. But, worn though the truisim is, until to some it has ceased to have force, to us there was reality in that trite maxim, "There's no place like home." There, at home, were both the the loved and the loving. There, relatives in Christ—and more! A faithful wife, a dear child—remnants of a broken family! O, only remnants! Alas, our home! But nevertheless, more dear to us than and other spot upon earth. The left, it is they who make it dear. Home! we were sailing thitherward; and that thought only was enough to throw around our passage a charm, a halo of brightness and joy.

The separation we had recently experienced became relieved—if not quite healed—by this other joy. And so it is in this world,—our Father is so good, that though He permits the chilling blast to blow upon us, and the bitter thing to come, He causes it to be succeeded by the warm sunlight and the sweet mercy that soothe and gladden the heart, until the pain and the grief are forgotten. Blessed be the wise Lord, the kind God, for His tender mercy!

We are out on the ocean, and we go to call on the acquaintances of ten weeks ago. But, how sad the tale! It is the old, old story. Death—ugly, monstrous, relentless,—has been among the crew in this short space of time, and the chief steward is no longer in his place. The day of our own entry into New York we were oppressed in the head with an acute pain from the very intense heat that prevailed—nearly a hundred degrees in the shade—and only by rest and bathing did we reduce the insanating fire. But the poor steward found the same heat to be fatal; and died two or three days afterward in a delirious condition. How does such an event cause us to reflect on the uncertainty of life. We know not what is before us. What may not this very week behold? (We wrote this at the beginning of our voyage, and, as will be seen by what follows, some things did happen to us, that show the propriety of such meditations and questions.)

The first three days of our passage were golden and calm. The water rested, nor troubled us with leap, or roar, or swell. It was smooth as glass, undisturbed as a mill-pond.

Sunday is come, and we are to tell to-day the wisdom that we have received from above. But with this day has come a storm, a fierce southerly gale. We roll, pitch and toss. We are all sick; and cannot muster a sufficient number to form a congregation. So the meeting cannot be held. The wind increases all the time, until it seems to rage with fury. The ocean boils awfully, and swells and sinks in alternate succession. We ship large quantities of water on deck, which swash against us at broadside and dash over us, now in foam, now in sheet, now in tremendous volume. It is about one o'clock in the day. We are chilly, and enduring the situation; for enjoying it is out of the question. A fireman is coming from the forepart of the steamer, and is just this side of the breakwater; when there rises an awful sheet of water, which throws itself across the deck, takes the unfortunate man off his feet, and over the side of the steamer. He passes us on our port side, and a life-bouy is thrown to him as he goes by the vessel. It falls within a few feet of him, but he grasps it not. The poor fellow is struggling, trying, so says one of his comrades, to take off his coat. He is a splendid swimmer. The cry of "Man overboard!" arouses every one. The Captain—whom we felt it duty to praise in our article on "Springfield Campmeeting"—is at his post. Deliberately, unhesitatingly he gives orders to lower the last ship's boat near the stern on the port side. In two or three minutes it is in the water. Five brave fellows volunteer to go out after the lost man. 'Tis a terrible day—a dirty sea, a rampant storm. They get into the boat, but in leaving the side of the vessel, a sudden jerk pitches the second officer—who is one of the crew—into the sea. In a minute he clambers up over the side of the boat, and away they go. What a time of peril! Small chance has that boat of ever returning! It is almost madness to send it out. But who, with a spark of humanity in his breast, could let the poor man go down without making an effort to save him? Should he be able to keep up, and see the "Hindoo" steaming away from him, O how sad would be his feelings! Captain Mills is not the man to do this sort of thing. So, risking the ship and all the passengers—risking his five good men—he sends out the boat to "rescue the perishing."

The Captain has ordered the engines to be stopped and reversed. We are now steaming backwards, stern foremost. Frequently we lose sight of the boat. The sea is washing us from end to end. We have to hold on to ropes, to anything to escape being carried over the bulwarks. We seem to be in the very trough of the sea. The situation is more than grand, it is fearful. Shall we all go down together? Nobody can positively say, but the circumstances are momentous. We presently come up to the boat. It has shipped two seas since it left our leeward quarter. And after sundry efforts, the crew climb up and are hauled in on deck. But where is the man, the fireman that was was washed overboard? A melancholy echo "Where?" is all the reply. Presently we speak to the brave fellows who ventured their all. They say they saw the life-bouy on its end, and they saw a cap. They came up to the cap and found it to be his who had been carried away. Then they rowed, might and main, to the bouy; but when they came up to it, it no longer stood endways,—the the man that they thought clung to it was nowhere to be found; and the life-bouy floated flat upon the waters. The poor fellow had gone down. Another added to that innumerable number who have found a grave in the depths of the sea. It made us all sad. The Captain, though so prompt and energetic while there was a chance, when he found all was unavailing, seemed affected as though his heart had been that of a child's. We had to cut the boat away, stove in, and more than half filled with water. The rest of the day was hung with a pall of gloom.

But better days succeeded; although, indeed, the most of them were wet, and the decks unfit for promenading. On Thursday night, however, we experienced another gale. The wind whistled terrifically, going by at tremendous velocity. The sea was swollen. And we creaked and cracked, as it were, with every minute. The storm was spiced with intermittent gusts, that sent shivers through our splendid steamer, making her roll to such an extent that every thing went dashing about and breaking. We were sitting in the saloon, when a stout mahogany chair went flying across the same and broke its back. Crockery ware, our portmanteaus, every thing was running about, knocking one against the other, doing mischief in all directions; and we had to hold on ourselves that we might not be thrown by the commotion of the elements.

It was a wild night; and more than once or twice did the steersmen let go of the wheel, unable to retain their footing or hold. There was a still kind of fear, an awful foreboding in the minds of some of the passengers. They apprehended the fatal minute when vessel and all it contained would make one last plunge and disappear. Often did it shake, and threaten the final effort. It was impossible to lie in one's berth; sleep fled from many eyes. We were shut down in the cabin. Then we called upon God, and felt sure that we were yet a vessel in the hands of the Lord, and, He still chose us for further use. The promises came to our mind, and we had confidence towards God. We felt that God would hear prayer and spare us. So we spoke hopefully to the passengers, and repeating some "faithful sayings and worthy of all acceptation," asked them if they would join us in prayer to our blessed God. They consented; and we prayed our very soul to heaven. Blessed be the Lord, we waethered the storm, and next morning the day was fresh and bright. The Lord is very gracious. No pieces of clay workmanship such as we are, can lift up our frail hearts to heaven, if we only ask aright, and fail of finding the Everlasting God and His enduring mercy.

The time wears on till Sunday, when, the day being propitious, we have a meeting in the cabin. We chose for reading that Psalm in which David says, "they who go down to the sea in ships, these see the wonderful works of the Lord;" and where he frequently breaks out, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonder ful works to the children of men." We heartily join in the same wish, for our God is so worthy of all praise. We preached for the salvation of our hearers, and was heartily thanked by some of them for our address. We do not care for that though; what we desire is that it may be a talk that shall be a means of their reformation and a source of glory to God. In our discourse we alluded to the death of the fireman, and we think to considerable purpose. Everything passed off well.

Four days more we touch the English shore. We are safely over once more. Over, to plan the best we can for Christ's cause; to work with all our powers for his glory.

The Lord is good, very good. David says: "Ho! give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good. . . . Let the redeemed of the Lord say so." And our whole purpose in writing this is to "say so," to say that "the Lord is good." "Let us exalt his name together." Amen.

THE JEWISH TABERNACLE OR SANCTUARY A TYPE.

L. A. WHEELER.

In a former article I gave what appears to me to be the antitype of the holy place or first apartment of the Jewish Tabernacle. Since then I have been requested to give my views on the antitype of the most holy place, or second apartment. First, I would say according to the best light I have, I think it is the New Jerusalem; for when John saw the holy city coming down from God out of heaven, a voice from heaven said, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men." Here the term "Tabernacle" is applied to that city.

Again, in the type there was the "ark of the covenant," which was two cubits and a half wide and deep." It was overlaid and inlaid with gold. In this ark was kept the tables of the law, the golden pot that contained manna, and Aaron's rod that budded; and also, in the side, a book of the law. Upon it was the mercy seat, with a cherub on each end, with their wings spread out over the mercy seat, on which rested the cloud of glory. After the children of Israel had got into the land of Canaan, Solomon built a temple in which to worship God. It was divided into two apartments, the "holy place" and "most holy place," similar to those of the tabernacle, but much more magnificent. To this "most holy place" the "ark of the covenant" was removed, upon which were placed the mercy seat and cherubim; and here the cloud of glory rested as in the tabernacle.

After the temple was dedicated, the children of Israel were to offer their prayers, wherever they might be, towards it. Daniel prayed three times a day with his windows open towards Jerusalem. Dan. 6: 10. Jonah from the midst of the sea looked—in his mind—towards the holy temple. Here they saw the mercy seat in figure. Their minds were directed towards that place; but ours towards heaven where our high priest has gone, and is now at the right hand of the Father, on the throne or mercy seat, in the "true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." Heb. 8: 2. Do we not here see the antitype of the two cherubim, and may not this throne be the place where those books are deposited that will be opened when the judgment shall sit, Rev. 20: 15, according to the pattern of heavenly things showed to Moses in the mount? Heb. 8: 5. Perhaps the Almighty has no need of literal books, but it is so presented to us. Again, we read, "he that overcometh shall eat of the hidden manna.. Rev. 2: 17. Whether this is literal or figurative "manna" I leave the reader to decide.

Again, Jerusalem which now is, is in bondage with her children; but Jerusalem which is from above is free, which is the mother of us all. Gal. 4; 25, 26. In what sense is it our parent, except by the begetting spirit, which proceeds from the occupants of that place? Is not this city the place where Christ went, when he ascended into heaven. Do we not have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail?" Heb. 10: 19, 20. So it seems to me; but I claim more weakness than infallibility, and leave it for the consideration of others.

THOUGHTS BY NIGHT AND DAY.

C. COLEGROVE.

Thoughts by night. I have just awaked, and it is still and dark. How I like this thick, deep, friendly darkness. I am weak and poor, and to God I turn with almost lightning quickness. Here I come, and here I shall stay as long as I am awake. Nay, I am determined to keep this place with God, and in God, and at his feet forever.

As a fish dies without water, and as a bird dies without air, so I die without God. Thou, Lord, knowest that. O Sovereign King, here I am courting thy notice, beseeching thee to look upon me intensely and perpetually! Withdraw not thy gaze. Relax not the vigilance of thy inspection. Consider my wants, and ponder and observe every way, want, weakness, vileness, dependence and yearning of my heart. Was there ever a heart naturally worse? I disguise nothing. My very joy is thy knowledge of me, and thy scrutinizing notice and attention to every failure, folly, faintness, burden, struggle and difficulty.

I have found out one thing. God is Heaven! Put it in italics, put it in capitals. God is greater than all his works. I never can stop short of one grand destiny. Every thing else is inferior and insufficient. It is absolutely necessary to live and dwell in God; not merely in his universe or in his capitalistic city (unutterably glorious that city is, I know, the capital of all capitals, royal and imperial, and bright exceedingly); yet no intelligent and earnest seeker after God can ever rest or stop short of reckoning God himself as the grand goal, the unexplored glory, the express sufficiency, the rest, the fitness, the perfection of all things through Jesus Christ.

O God! I am tossed and tired of burdens and perplexities. But let me not rebel. One thing is certain—my will must be subject, perfectly subject to thee. I thank thee for the great gift of volition which thou hast given me; but my will is vile, selfish and wandering. But I have brought my will to thee, and here it is, forever surrendered, dedicated and subject. This is my will, here thus to put itself into captivity to thy command. Command and it shall obey; govern and it shall submit. Dictate, renovate and make it thy servant in every aim, impulse, instinct, in its beginnings and in the secret mysteries of its least and utmost action, in all its motions forever.

There are some things I cannot understand. It does seem as if thou didst sometimes almost entirely leave me; and there are trials and disappointments I cannot understand. But my loyalty to God must not falter. I must be loyal in spite of troubles. My loyalty must be high, true, pure, steadfast and everlasting. All man's gain and greatness is weak and contemptible. He himself is like grass, and his treasures too often but mere trash. I am a great sinner, but God can raise me from the lowest depth to whatever height he please. I am not to dictate to thee what thou shalt do, but O God! do for me according to my great and exceeding need; do for me with thy right hand like thyself. And yet, if thou wilt have me but a pebble in thy great building, so be it.

Is it near morning? I hope not. I must have much time to pray. How can I reach out my hand to touch some electric point in God's machinery of power that I may be transformed and vivified? Here, Jesus, I am determined. I shall lie at thy feet by faith. The weeping woman kissed thy feet, so do I. I beg thee make me true in heart and light in God. Art thou not coming? Ah! I know thou art coming soon. I want immortality. How faint and fallible is this fluttering, mortal life. Nothing will ever do until thou shalt utter the decisive, life-imparting word. Speak that word, and I live, I breathe, I rise, I spring from this death.

Alas! I see the dawn begin to tremble through the curtains, and I have much yet to do. I lay all things before thee. I would have thee come now, ere yet the sun has risen. The sun seems faint, cold and dead without thee. If thou wilt, come now. There is not a thing I love on earth to hinder thee. Take me, I am ready. I almost dread the pain and peril of living. Yet keep me, if I am yet to live and labor. Help me with renewing energy and sweetness. Yet alas! how easily and often some sorrow tugs at my heart. But thou takest all ways for training thy servants.

O I must be thine to be used by thee Would to God I might do good to as many as thou wilt. What millions suffer! What miseries are multiplied! Remember the poor. Remember thy glory. Use me for thy glory. No other service is of any account in the world.

Thoughts by day. God knows we are erring creatures. Some of us have thought the Lord would have come ere this. We have been like people who see a storm in the sky. Some in their intense expectation exclaim, "Let us be under cover; it will rain in five minutes." Yet it might not rain in fifty. But the Lord can forgive this, surely. He will not count it with the contrary exclamations of those who say it will not rain at all, but call the inky treasure-house of thunder a mere mist, like the fleece that sails across the moon. In fact, it is no strange thing that as the day draws on there should be calls to watch and cries of alarm, varying in their manner, but honest-hearted and emphatic. The watching and wary sentinel cries when he spies danger.

How many of us would like to be electrified? We wish God would suddenly and mightily move us. But he will have us use our reason and our will. He will have our volition in its highest development. He will have us seek him because we choose to do it; and love, enjoy and magnify him, because we have perseveringly sought him. We feel difficulties, we endure temptations and suffer pain. We have repeatedly missed, or erred, aud seen how unfit man is to manage himself. The spider, that wills a hundred times to mend his broken net, deserves to succeed. God prizes perseverance. He pities bruised hearts. When the will is obedient, the Lord waits and watches till it turns itself toward him. What a glory to God to see the will turn back and beg God's help. He can compel the will, but he leaves it in a great measure free. In his own way perhaps he does compel by moral means. Happy is a rectified will. It desires to be rectified until its law is perfect rectitude.

Trials are the ballast of unsteady minds. How foolsh, high-headed and impetuous many are prone to be. And many really good people must be checked with drawbacks which they think very unfortunate. We are apt to think the presence of evil is nearly unendurable. But Jesus endured Judas. We may think we must be morally perfected to-day or to-morrow, but we are not. Some are not certainly. I know I am not. I have no doubt that some are so constituted that not only are trials indispensable, but the constant consciousness of imperfection is also indispensable to humility. Some must always fight or die from moral sloth. Danger suggests vigilance. Difficulty demands exertion. Suffering drives us to God. Weakness seeks omnipotence. Weariness gives preciousness to rest in the presence and compassion of greatness.

It is impossible to rest perfectly until immortality comes. There is physical pain, dimness of vision, and the perpetual contemplation of havoc every where. There is deeply wrought in the consciousness of sharp-seeing, introspective and God-seeking saints, that almost greatest of all experimental sorrows, that of not knowing, loving, or doing according to any high ideal of efficiency. Hence comes the looking for Jesus with his life-giving might. The kingly advance of the Messiah is the sole key to deliverance. Christ by his coming masters the situation.

We ought to work here diligently. We hunger and thirst for divine direction. We have lost much by poor manœuvering, as keepers of our own or the Lord's interest. Yet out of weakness and failure we desire God to draw express elements of blessing by sharpening, polishing and invigorating us in this last grand speck. To all the elect goes out the great call, as the days go by, "Face to the front, for the Lord is coming." The votaries of pleasure laugh, the wicked profane God's name, but a great transaction is impending. Grown daring by delay, the transgressors try many forbidden paths. But let us not do evil. Let us be believing. If Europe trembles with excitement, or half the world boil like a pot, let us have faith. Over all the hubbub of jealous kingdoms, sharpening their swords and shouting over this intoxicating, exasperating Turkish puzple, and ready to concentrate armies in bloody convulsion, let us eye the form of the Coming One. Not as they who hug a hobby, but with great expectation. Hoping, waiting, praying and working. Let us have every-day talks with him. Ah! what a blessing to be constant in these exercises. And if the Lord will, let us fill up the time with godly talks about the best, mightiest and most edifying things.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Connecticut A. C. Conference met at New Britain, Thursday, Oct. 19th, at 10 A. M. The President, Bro. Seth Woodruff, in the Chair. Prayer by Bro. Hitchcock.

Committee on credentials: O. D. Woodruff, H. P. Bradley.

Preachers present: Seth Woodruff, B. Hitchcock, G. L. White, R. K. Stark, I. Curtis, H. W. Perkins, B. St.John.

Delegates present: Edward Cooper, James Hodson, Sr. L. N. Steele, of New Haven; Wm. Reynolds, A. P. Bradley, Bristol; Luman Watrous, Morris; Chas. E. Hart, Milldale; W. J. Bunce, Plainville; O. M. Gilman, South Windsor.

The report of the Campmeeting Committee was read, showing a balance of $27.42 in the Treasury. It was voted that the report be accepted.

After the usual preliminaries, officers of the Conference were chosen as follows: President, Seth Woodruff; Vice President, A. Elliott; Secretary and Treasurer, O. D. Woodruff; Campmeeting Committee elected: Seth Woodruff, O. D. Woodruff, O. M. Gilman, Wm. Reynolds.

Voted, That the Campmeeting Committee act as Tent Committee.

Voted, That Bro. Lemuel Berry be received as a member of this Conference.

O. D. Woodruff resigned his position as a member of the Campmeeting Committee, and also as Secretary and Treasurer of the Conference; his resignation was accepted. Bro. H. P. Bradley was chosen a member of the Campmeeting Committee to fill the vacancy.

It was voted to postpone the election of Secretary and Treasurer until the next session of the Conference.

The reports of delegates and preachers showed cause for encouragement in some places; while in others the interest was not what could be desired. All however, seemed to feel the importance of the great truth which called us out as a people; and that the coming of the Lord is nigh at hand. The meetings on the Sabbath were attended with interest, and a new impetus seemed to be imparted to the church at New Britain; and they intend to have preaching a part of the time, at least. May the blessing of the Lord attend.

O. D. WOODRUFF.

P. S. Having acted as a member of the Campmeeting Committee during the past seven years, and feeling that to lay by this burden with its cares and trials would be a relief, I, for this reason, offered my resignation. But as my brethren of the Conference desired that I should remain on that committee; and some of my brethren and sisters, who were not present, think I have done wrong before the Lord in taking this step, I feel to prayerfully consider the matter and will endeavor to do the will of the Lord, whether it be in harmony with my will, or that of my brethren and sisters.

STOCKHOLDER'S REPORT.

A business meeting of the stockholders of the New East Maine Mission Tent, was held at the school-house at East Palermo, Saturday, at 4 o'clock P. M., Oct. 28, 1876.

The meeting was called to order by Bro. J. Carr, and Bro. S. K. Partridge was called to the Chair, and Bro. H. S. Mitchell was chosen Secretary. Brn. J. Carr and G. Weeks were appointed to prepare business and report an organization, who reported the following.

Believing that the end of all things is at hand, and also that what is done for the salvation of the perishing must be done quickly, we, as an association of brethren and sisters in Christian Mission work, propose to do all we can in raising a fund to be used for the support of Tent and Mission meetings, Therefore,

Resolved, That we will be known as the East Maine Second Advent Christian Missionary Association, whose object shall be the heralding of the speedy coming of Christ; and the preparation of a people to meet him, by the holding of Tent and Mission meetings as the Lord may direct and furnish means for their support.

The officers of this Association shall consist of a Committee of five, with power to select from their number a Chairman, Secretary, and Treasurer, who shall have the entire control of the Mission Tent, appoint and superintend the holding of all Tent and Mission meetings of the Association, receive and disburse all funds collected for its work, and report at its annual meeting.

Five members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business at every regular meeting. Each member of this Association and each share of two dollars and fifty cents, shall be entitled to one vote in any regular meeting,

All officers of this Association shall be chosen by ballot at its annual meeting, which shall be held the third Saturday in October.

Voted, To accept the report of the Committee; and the Association organized on the plan proposed by them. Brn. Carr, G. W. Weeks, L. M. Smith, Wm. H. Wing, and Paul Ames were chosen an Executive Committee. The Committee organized by the choice of J. Carr, Chairman; G. W. Weeks, Secretary; and Wm. H. Wing, Treasurer.

Voted, To hold the next meeting with the church at Rockland, to commence Nov. 16th.

GEMS.

— One trouble sometimes makes us forget a thousand mercies.

— Holiness becometh the house of the Lord forever. Let us then be careful to defile not the sanctuary by our unseemly conduct.

— A man must be separated from his own righteousness before he cau work out one single right act before God.

— Never forget that the end of a sermon is the salvation of the people.

— He that hath slight thoughts of sin never had great thoughts of God.

— There are men who would be thought wise if they had wealth, or foolish if they were penniless.

— Many times we go to God as languidly as if we were afraid he would accept us, and pray as coldly as if we were unwilling he should hear us.

— Among the ingredients of happiness few are more important than a habit of cheerfulness.

— The closest walk with God is the sweetest heaven that can be enjoyed on earth.

— He who is impatient with events is impatient with God.

— The first step of declension in the christian, is declension in communion with the source of strength.

— If the weakest saint is only leaning on the Lord, he is stronger than all the powers of Satan, because the Lord is with him.

— If we have not a hand to receive or hold that which Christ offers to us, what is sufficient in him cannot be effectual to us.

CENTRAL KANSAS A. C. CONF.

The A. C. Conference of Central Kansas convened with the church at Arvonia, Sept. 30th. In connection with this meeting the Kansas State Campmeeting was held, according to appointment, and continued over Oct. 18th. Elds. V. F. Hunt, E. Hubbel, M. Mc.Guire, E. N. Bliss, James Page, T. R. Comstock, J. C. Smith, Daniel Webster, H. H. Klocks, and N. S. Brion were in attendance.

The reports from the different churches were good, with a few exceptions. The reports of labor from preaching brethren were interesting, being mixed with stirring exhortations, which was meat in due season.

A motion was made and carried, that the Chair appoint a committee of three to arrange for protracted meetings during the present quarter. The following brethren were appointed: D. Webster, V. F. Hunt and J. C. Smith.

A motion was made and carried that this Conference form a new Constitution and By-laws; to be presented at the next session of the Conference. The following brethren were appointed: H. H. Klock, V. F. Hunt and J. C. Smith.

On motion, D. Webster was chosen district Evangelist for the present quarter. On motion, the Conference adjourned to meet with the church at Centropolis, Franklin Co., the first Saturday in Jan., 1877.

The Board of Directors for the State Conference met at this meeting, to take into consideration the request of Brn. E. N. Bliss, J. Page and T. R. Comstock.

The following requests were brought before the directors: First, the connection of the North Western Quarterly Conference of Kansas with the State Conference, which was granted. Second, to license Brn. James Page, T. R. Comstock, and E. N. Bliss, which was granted. Bro. Page was set apart for the work of the ministry.

The meeting was not attended as well as desired during the week on account of sickness, but on each Sunday there was a good attendance. The preaching during these meetings was good. One went forward in the ordinance of baptism, and united with the church at this place. Some forty, or more, gathered around the table to commemorate the Lord's Supper, the last evening. And thus closed one of those precious seasons which are foretastes of the coming glory and rest which are just at hand.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DRESS ABOMINATIONS.

Of all the abominations in dress, and they are legion, the fashion of putting a hump on the back is one of the most unsightly and ridiculous. Half the time the arrangement is crooked, and looks like a deformity. And if we didn't know that it was an attempt to beautify, our hearts would flow with sympathy. As it is, our compassion is taxed. No woman can keep herself perfectly straight with such a wabbling, flapping appendage at her back.

Now nothing is more common than to see a lady dressed in silk and laces, flowers and feathers, sailing down a public street as dignified as a queen, with the hump on her back askew.

There has always been a disposition to bunch the clothing at the back, as though women had not already enough burdens to bear. No wonder there is a general complaint of back-ache, and nervous debility. The heat of accumulated clothing and the weight is most uncomfortable and damaging.

A lady who has spent fourteen years in Java, among a heathen people, told us that after the death of her husband, who was a merchant there, she longed to return to America, her native land; but the thought that she must put off the light, loose, comfortable garments worn in Java, and put on the heavy, cumbrous, complicated clothing worn by the women of this country, almost deterred her. She came, but such are the burdens and discomforts of our costume, that she thinks she cannot endure it, and must go back to Java.—Christian Women.

What a comment on modern Christianity; that a lady should dread to leave a land of heathen, to go to a land of professed christians, because she would be compelled, by force of fashion, to wear a costume which "burdens and discomforts;" producing an appearance "most unsightly and ridiculous." They are ridiculous, burdensome and abominably extravagant; and the habit of wearing such is a crying sin before God and a direct violation of his holy precepts. If the lady had applied to Christ for grace, she would have obtained power to withstand the current of fashion, and triumphed over popular opinion. Where is the faith that will cause our women to adorn themselves like holy women of old, with modest apparel, a meek and quiet spirit, and not with golden ornaments and broidered hair? When our faith is weak, the habits and fashions of the world draw us into their currents, and we have no power to resist their forces. ED.

THE CHEERFUL VOICE.

The comfort and happiness of home and home intercourse depend very much on the kindly and affectionate training of the voice. Trouble and care, and vexation will and must, of course, come; but let them not creep into our voices. Let only our kindly and happier feelings be vocal in our homes. Let them be so, if for no other reason, for the little children's sake. These sensitive little beings are exceedingly susceptible to the tones. They hear so much that we have forgotten to hear; for as we advance in years our lives become more interior. We are abstracted from outward scenes and sounds. We think, we reflect, we begin gradually to deal with the past as we have formerly vividly lived in the present. Our ears grow dull to external sound; they are turned inward, and listen chiefly to the echoes of past voices.

We catch no more the merry laughter of children. We hear no more the note of the morning bird. The brook that used to prattle so gayly to us, rushes by unheeded; we have forgotten to hear such things. But little children, remember, sensitively hear them all. Mark how at every sound the young child starts, and turns, and listens! And thus, with equal sensitiveness, does it catch the tones of human voices. How were it possible that the sharp and hasty word, the fretful and complaining tone, should not startle and pain, even depress the sensitive little being whose harp of life is so newly and delicately strung, vibrating even to the gentle breeze, and ever thrilling sensitively to the tones of such voices as sweep across it? Let us then be kind and cheerful spoken in our homes.—Selected.

THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

IT IS I; BE NOT AFRAID.—MATT. 24: 27.

Toss'd with rough winds and faint with fear,
Above the tempest, soft and clear,
What still small accents greet mine ear!
"'Tis I; be not afraid.

"'Tis I, who washed thy spirit white;
'Tis I, who gave thy blind eyes sight;
'Tis I, thy Lord, thy life, thy light;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

"Those raging winds, this surging sea,
Bear not a breath of wrath to thee:
That storm has all been spent on me;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

"This bitter cup, I drank it first;
To thee it is no draught accurst,
The hand that gives it thee is pierced;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

"Mine eyes are watching by thy bed,
Mine arms are underneath thy head,
My blessing is around thee shed;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

"When on the other side, thy feet
Shall rest 'mid thousand welcomes sweet,
One well known voice thy heart shall greet;
'Tis I; be not afraid.

"From out the dazzling majesty,
Gently he'll lay his hand on thee,
Saying, 'Beloved, lov'st thou me?'
'Twas not in vain I died for thee;
'Tis I; be not afraid."

WONDERFUL PROPHECY.
The "Abomination of Desolation."

A. W. SIBLEY.

(Concluded.)

To what country shall we look for a power answering the description of the one in the prophecy of Daniel and the one to which the Savior alludes? According to the prophecy this power must come upon the territory of the fourth beast of Daniel. Admitting the fourth beast to symbolize the Roman Empire, in Dan., 7th chapter, we inquire, Has there ever come up on Roman territory a power whose characteristics are like the one indicated in the prophecy? We answer emphatically, There has. The papal hierarchy exactly fills the prophetic mould, and according to facts gathered from its history it has accomplished the work delineated in the predictions of Daniel, Jesus and John.

The Romans had a territory embracing Carthage, Macedon, Greece, Syria, Bithmia, Cyprus, Cappadocia, Pontus, Syracuse, Numedia, Spain, Balearian Isle, Dalmatia, Thonecia and the South Eastern part of Brittan and Egypt which was added B. C. 30. Rome continued in its consolidated form for over three hundred years, and then was divided into its Eastern and Western division.

Between the years four hundred and four hundred and ninety-six there was on the territory of the Western division of the Roman Empire the following kingdoms answering to the ten horns on the "great, and terrible" beast of the 7th chapter of Daniel. 1. The Vandals in Africa A. D., 427. 2. The Suevis passed into Spain about A. D. 409. 3. The Visigoths in Spain A. D., 472. 4. The Anglos and Saxons arrived in Britton about A. D., 450. 5. The Brittons in Wales A. D., 450. 6. The Burgundians entered Gaul about A. D., 413. 7. The Franks in Gaul A. D., 407. 8. Ostrogoths in Italy A. D., 493. 9. Gepedia A. D., 450. This tribe established themselves in Dacia on the death of Attila. 10. Alemaniai in Gaul established themselves A. D., 496.

These ten kingdoms were all in existence and established in A. D., 520, and occupied what was then known as Gaul, Spain, Britton, Italy, Dacia, Africa, and the territory north of Italy. The Eastern division of the Roman kingdom had its capital at what was then called Byzantium, and now Constantinople. In the latter part of 518 Justin was crowned king of the Eastern division of the Roman Empire. De Connenin in his History of the Popes Vol. 1, p. 102, says,—"During the same year (518) the Emperor Anastasius died, being struck by lightning. The priests, availing themselves of this circumstance, frightened the superstitious multitude and threatened the heretics with the vengeance of God.

"Their intrigues were so well conducted that they placed on the throne Justin, a very ignorant old man, and from that very cause, a good Catholic. The Prince on his elevation gave a direction to affairs entirely opposite to that of his predecessor. The pretended heretics were punished and the populace by reiterated acclamations made the Catholic faith triumphant. The will of a fanatical mob having been confirmed by a council held at Constantinople, the Catholics could exercise their vengeance against the Eutychians."

In Sir Paul Ryco's His. of the Popes, p. 88, we find the following: "In the year A. D., 519, Justin, to show his zeal for the council of Chalcedon, called his wife Dupecina by the name of Euphemia, the martyr in whose church that council was held. He recalled the Catholics from banishment, exiled the Arians and Eutychians, thrust Seveius from his bishopric of Antioch, and condemned him to lose his blasphemous tongue. Vitalianus, master under Anastasius and very intimate with Justin, was, as it is thought by his command, murdered in the palace. In whose place Justinian his sister's son was chosen.

"From this time onward the poor heretics, as they were called, were driven into exile and their goods confiscated. Hormisdas the sovereign Pontiff, at that time persecuted the Nestorians, Eutychians, Arians, Pelagians and Manichians whom he caused to be publicly scourged, both men and women, before sending them into exile." Bower in speaking of pope Hormisdas says, "He was of a most haughty, vindictive and imperious temper, and to the eternal infamy of his name and memory, the first Christian bishop who in matters of conscience dared openly to countenance nay, and to sanctify, slaughter and bloodshed."

This change in the East by the elevation of Justin to the throne brings the Catholic world to a new era in church and State. The first effort of Justin was to heal the division that had rent the Church in the East. In this he was very effectually aided by his nephew Justinian, who was a zealous Catholic.

As soon as Justin ascended the throne he sent to the Pope at Rome requesting him to send legates into the East that should be competent to forward and accomplish the great work of uniting the two churches of Rome and Constantinople.

In the year A. D., 519, in harmony with the request of the Emperor in the East, the Pope sends his legates, who, on being introduced to the Emperor Justin, at Constantinople, presented the following conditions on which the union could be brought about: 1. To anathematize all heretics in general and those in particular, who have been mentioned above, together with Acacius. 2. To receive the council of Chalcedon, the letter of Leo on the incarnation, and all the letters which that Pope had written on the Christian religion. 3. They were to declare that they conformed and would conform in all things to the apostolic See; that they received all the Constitutions of the Roman Church. Bower's History, Vol. I, Pp. 313, 314.

The result of this effort made by Justin and Hormisdas was the re-union of the Church of Constantinople with that of Rome. The Emperor of the East presented the articles on which the union was to be made to the Senate; which articles were approved by that body, and afterwards signed by the Patriarchs. The approval of the articles of union by the Senate at Constantinople, and the signing of them by the Patriarchs, not only healed a division of long standing between the two churches, but united Church and State, nationalized Roman Catholicism, making it the religion of the Empire.

At this time the religious world was divided into five great sections, comprising the Dioceses of Rome, Constantinople, Antioch, Alexandria and Jerusalem. The last of these cities had this honor conferred by the Council of Chalcedon, A. D., 451.

By virtue of an edict issued by Justin, a great persecution commenced in this last mentioned diocese, viz., Jerusalem or Judea. Says Gibbon, Vol. 4, p. 530: "The Samaritans of Palestine were a motley race, an ambiguous sect, rejected as Jews by the Pagans, by the Jews as schismatics, and by the Christians as idolaters. The abomination of the cross had already been planted on their holy mount of Garizim, but the persecution of Justinian offered only the alternative of baptism or rebellion. They chose the latter; and under the standard of a desperate leader they arose in arms, and retaliated their wrongs on the lives, the property, and the temples of a defenceless people.

The Samaritans were finally subdued by the regular forces of the East. Twenty thousand were slain, twenty thousand were sold by the Arabs to the infidels of Persia and India, and the remains of that unhappy nation atoned for the crimes of treason by the sin of hypocrisy. But in the creed of Justinian, the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers; and he piously labored to establish with fire and sword the unity of the Christian faith."

Bower, referring to the same events, gives more particulars in relation to the persecution and their flight. He says, "While the Arian king was striving by the most just and equitable laws to clear the church from all simony in the West, the Catholic Emperor was employing the most unjust and and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the East; that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any Christian emperor had yet set foot or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, such as did not in the term of three months embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared infamous, and as such, excluded from all employments both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving anything by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal.

These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost vigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants or the soldiery who guarded the passes."

We learn from this historical extract that the Catholic Emperor in the East sent an army into Asia for the express purpose of persecuting the heretics, and that that army acted under a decree issued by Justin, the then reigning emperor at Constantinople; and this was the first army of professed Christians employed to make war on Protestants. This persecution is in the very locality where Jesus said it would be; and when the disciples saw it they were to flee to the mountains.

It has been inferred from the fact that Jesus told his disciples when they saw Jerusalem encompassed with armies, "then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains," that the Abomination of Desolation brought to view in Matt. 24: 15, is the same as the armies around Jerusalem. Would not the command "flee to the mountains," be just as applicable to the saints when the persecution was raging in Judea, as it was when Jerusalem was encompassed with armies? We think we have before proved that the army around Jerusalem could not be the Abomination referred to by the Savior in Matt. 24: 15.

Again, since there is incontrovertible evidence that the first papal persecution against Christians commenced in the diocese of Judea, under an edict of a Catholic Emperor, and carried to the extent that many were "inhumanly massacred," and thousands "betook themselves to flight," we think it must be admitted that when the Savior said, "Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains" (Matt. 21: 15), he referred to saints at that time under these terrible trying circumstances.

Thank God! the day of papal supremacy is in the past, and its long foretold doom will soon come, when the martyred millions will rejoice, and saints of all ages catch the strain, and help swell the glad hallelujahs throughout the vast domain. In connection with the final fall of the papal hierarchy, will come the golden period of the saints' triumph, the day so long looked-for and ardently desired by all patriarchs, prophets and saints of all time. Glorious epoch, grand epiphamy will that be when the "King of kings" shall come in all his glory and that of the Father to rule the world and save his people.

"The Lord will come, a dreadful form,
With wreath of flame and robe of storm,
On cherub wings, and wings of wind,
Anointed Judge of human kind.

Can this be he who, wont to stray
A pilgrim on the world's highway,
By power oppressed, and mocked by pride?
O God! is this the Crucified?"

PROPHECY: ITS IMPORTANCE AND UTILITY.

BY B. GILLINGHAM.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts; knowing this first that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Peter, 1: 19–21.

The Bible is a wonderful book; its enemies themselves being judges. Yes; in the histories it records, in the miracles it relates, doctrines it teaches, morals it inculcates, and the predictions it contains. True, these have been assailed. Atheists, materialists, rationalists, spiritualists, and ritualists, by their several systems, have done much to unsettle the minds of men in regard to the verities of Divine revelation. Its historic records have been disputed and denied; its miracles have been challenged; its fundamental doctrines doubted and set aside; its morals reduced to human standards; and its predictions placed beside the ancient oracles of paganism, and the modern revelation of spiritualism. But the good old book still survives, and will live when all human productions are perished.

Among the many evidences of the divine authority and inspiration of the Bible, prophecy holds the most prominent place, and will be found to stand like an impregnable rock against all the attacks of the enemy. The Old Testament Scriptures are contained in thirty-eight books; of these, twenty-eight bear, more or less, the prophetic seal. The great Teacher and his inspired apostles make frequent reference to what was predicted by Moses and in the psalms and the prophets; and quote both fulfilled and unfulfilled prophecy. These various facts, together with the statements embodied in the text, must be regarded as sufficient warrant and authority for giving the subject a prominent place in our teaching.

Let the following propositions have our candid consideration:

I. Prophecy is Divine in its source. That God is the source whence prophecy is derived will be apparent from the following considerations:

1. The character of the events themselves.
2. The many and varied details associated with the events.
3. The distance of the period in which they should occur.
4. The events were parts of the manifold and comprehensive purposes and plans of Jehovah.
5. The events were such as would be far beyond the ken of mortals, however gifted, and such as could come only from a Being at once wise and beneficent.

Among other points to which we might give some consideration, we may refer to the revealed purposes of the Divine Being in regard to the Christ—the Anointed One. His birth, his life, sufferings, death, resurrection, ascension, high exaltation, priesthood, etc., as connected with human redemption, etc.

The same prophetic word which foretold Messiah's first advent gives us the assurance that he will come again,—come as he went away, and to the very spot on which he last stood—"the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east,"—"come with all his saints," and be King over all the earth." We might enlarge and show how the prophetic word embraces and dwells upon matters relating to the future of the church and the world. These may be left to be discussed as separate and distinct topics.

II. The second proposition is,—That prophecy is two-fold in its agency, verse 21 (latter part).

1. There is the revealing, the inspiring agent, "The Holy Spirit."

Taking into account the teaching of the Bible regarding the nature and operations of the Spirit, there can be no doubt as to his being able to act upon the mind of man, and give to those on whom he moved such a plenitude of light, and such revelations, as to satisfy them as to their source, and the reality and certainity of the events to occur in the ages of the then far-distant future. This divine agent is said to be the Spirit of wisdom; that "He searcheth all things, even the deep things of God." It follows "that all the requirements of prophecy could be and were met by him."

Once more: in these divinely inspired productions there is a wonderful adaptation to the nature, the necessities, the desires, and the destiny of man, and also a manifestation of the condescension and love of the universal Father.

2. There are channels of communication, "holy men of God." God has, with few exceptions, employed such for holy purposes, and so especially in regard to the matter under consideration. Their character, therefore, would so far be a warrant for their honesty. While the persecution and suffering to which they were exposed would evidence their sincerity. Thus, too, God blesses man by man.

III. The third proposition is,—Prophecy is certain in its accomplishment.

Our first argument is, That many portions of the prophetic word have already been verified. For instance, in regard to Christ's first advent. Also in reference to human empire.

There are a few passages in which there is a break, an interregnum, such as Isaiah 40. Christ read on to first clause of verse 2, and paused, saying, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." The remaining portion relates to what is still future—"the day of vengeance of our God."

Predictions relating to individual men and their doings are of frequent occurrence. The case of Cyrus (Isa. 44.) and others. The records of the New Testament of events predicted in the Old Testament give the assurance that the unfulfilled predictions shall be as certainly, as fully, and as literally verified.

In the context, Peter refers to the scenes on the mount of Transfiguration. From these scenes, of which he, with others, was an eye-witness, the apostle's conclusion is, that we have more secure the prophetic word (Alford), especially in relation to "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." To that prophetic word he says, "Ye do well that ye take heed. This leads to our last proposition, namely.

IV. That prophecy, if rightly studied, is of varied utility.

Peter and his fellow apostles thus regarded it. He says that, in preaching the gospel, the glad tidings, they reported the things which the prophets taught in their ministrations.

The utility of the prophetic word is seen in the following considerations:

1. It will enable us to understand more fully and clearly the wise and benificent plans and purposes of the Divine Being in regard to the church, the Hebrew race, and the world.

2. A careful study of prophecy will have the effect of removing, to a great extent, the ambiguity and difficulty, which now attach through rabbinical glosses, human traditions, and systematic theology, and of showing that misapplication of the word of prophecy, by the spiritualising method of interpretation, is the main cause of the mystery that appears to surround the prophetic word.

3. It will be found that the prophetic portions of the Bible throw a flood of light on nearly the whole of the sacred volume; while religious teachers, whether in the pulpit or the Sabbath school, would be the means of leading those under their instruction to study the inspired records for themselves; and all would be more disposed and better able to make a bold and determined stand on behalf of God's truth in general, and of portions of his truth that may be even unpopular.

Once more, prophecy sheds its cheering light on the darkness and gloom of the moral, the social, and political horizon at all times, and was never more needed than in our own day. The occasional quiet is likely to deceive; but the stillness presages, while it precedes, the storm. But the clouds seem to be gathering, the darkness is deepening, and the threatening tempest will, and perhaps soon, break forth in all its fury. As an American writer well observes: "The rise of new forms of superstition, the abounding of iniquity, the wide and rapid spread of infidelity in its varied phases, may, and do, sadly perplex the observant statesman, the philosopher, and the theologian, who pay little or no attention to the prophetic statements of God's book; but those who 'take heed to the sure word of prophecy as unto a light that shineth in a dark place,' while they are led to expect all these things, are enabled, when they occur, not only to contemplate them without fear or alarm, but they see more promise in the darkest features of the times than in all the pious and patriotic dreams of men whose cry is, Reform! Reform! Reform! They turn to the hopes of prophetic truth; they take its light; and in the darkness they read of coming light, and see the arguments for the speedy springing forth of glorious and unfading hopes—not such as human reason calculates, but such as God purposes, and his word predicts."

In conclusion, 1. It is our duty to study prophecy. It is of Divine authority, and therefore the duty becomes imperative. Besides, it is solemnly enjoined; "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord!" Christ repeats the injunction, and says, "Search the Scriptures." And his inspired apostles drew their most powerful and convincing arguments from prophecy, and derived from the same source their strongest motives and incentives to christian duty and privilege.

2. Further, prophecy is one, and perhaps the strongest, of the evidences of Divine revelation in general, and of Christianity in particular. It is said: "If Christianity be anything, it is everything." Such being the case, it is important that we should, in these days of rebuke and blasphemy, become well acquainted with the principal "pillar and ground" of our faith and hope.

Let us be mindful to study prophecy carefully. The right way will be found to be the best and the easiest. The safest rule is to regard unfulfilled prophecy in the same sense as we do the fulfilled.

Lastly, the study of prophecy is a high privilege. Amid all that is dark and threatening, it imparts light, inspires hope, and gives peace and joy. While understanding these things ourselves, we shall be the more competent to teach others, guarding them against infidel and other errors, and enabling them to "discern the signs of the times."

There are, at the present time, signs in the political earth, and in the ecclesiastical heavens, that are ominous of days of darkness and tribulation, of conflict and danger. Yet how few of the watchmen of Christendom are found standing on the tower of Divine prophecy sounding the alarm! As this intermediate dispensation draws to a close, the gloom will thicken, the tempest will increase in violence, and wild commotion threatens the utter ruin of human systems. Amid all, let us attend to Peter's admonition, and then we shall be able to say with the psalmist, "God is our refuge and strength," etc.—The Bible Echo.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

DANIEL LARRABEE.

"Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs and the earth shall cast out its dead."

Oh! joyful thought that at His coming our friends that are sleeping in their graves shall break forth out of their cold, dark prisons, with songs of victory.

Many, that verily thought they were all reconciled to Christ, will come forth to hear the awful word, Depart. Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. But it is to me a joyful thought that we may be permitted to greet each other then with smiles and singing.

I can, by the eye of faith, see them bounding into new life from the little hillside graveyards and the village cemetery. I can see Christ sitting there in royal beauty upon the throne of his glory. Then death itself shall die. Then shall we hear his voice saying, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee, hide thyself as it were but for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. Then kind friends that have parted here in sorrow will meet in the New Jerusalem.

I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband; and I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

May the love of God so fill our hearts that they may have free intercourse with him. May he help us to keep his commandments here, so that we may have right to the tree of life, and may enter through the gates into the city, to go out no more forever. He that testifieth these things saith Surely, I come quickly: Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus.

West Hamley, Mass.

THE RIGHT WAY.

Reader, are you sure you are in the right way? Do you know where you must go for the pardon of your sins? Do you know where forgiveness is to be found? There is a way both sure and plain, and into that way I desire to guide your feet.

The right way is, simply to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ as your Savior. It is to cast your soul, with all it sins, unreservedly on Christ; to cease completely from any dependence on your own works and doings, either in whole or in part, and to rest on no other work but Christ's work, no other righteousness but Christ's righteousness, no other merit but Christ's merit, as your ground of hope. Take this course, and you are a pardoned soul. "To Christ," says Peter, "give all the prophets witness, that through his name whomsoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Acts 10: 43.

The Lord Jesus Christ, in great love and compassion, has made a full and complete satisfaction for sin by his own death upon the cross. There he offered himself as a sacrifice for us, and allowed the wrath of God, which we deserved to fall on his own head. For our sins he gave himself, suffered and died, the just for the unjust, the innocent for the guilty, that he might deliver us from the curse of a broken law, and provide a complete pardon for all who are willing to receive it.

Reader, believe on this Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. Come to him this day with all thy sins and wickedness, with all thy doubts and fears, with all thy feelings of unfitness and unworthiness, and he will not cast thee out, nor refuse thee. He has said it. He will stand to it. He never breaks his word. "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." John 6: 37.

Reader, do you want to have your sins pardoned? You have heard of the right way. Walk in it, and you shall be saved.—J. C. Ryle.

THE RELATION OF SHUSHAN TO THE VISION.—DAN. 8TH.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

The geographical location of this "vision" of Daniel is an important item to be considered in arriving at a correct conclusion as to the meaning and date of this remarkable prophecy. Many interpreters of this prophecy date this vision from the meridian of the Medo Persian empire, when Cyrus conquered Babylon. But if this be so, and the date as given by Usher and placed in our Bibles is correct, then the vision must have ended more than a century ago; because from 536 B. C., to 1876 A. D., are 2412 years, whereas the vision is but 2300 years. Some suppose that Daniel was on official business from Babylon to Shushan when he had this vision; but there is no historical proof that Shushan was built till from twenty to sixty years after Daniel had this vision. Moreover we might as well suppose that John was personally in the wilderness (Rev. 15. 3) or Ezekiel in Jerusalem (Ezek. 8: 3), when in fact the former was on the island of Patmos, and the latter in Babylon when they had their respective revelations. Says Bishop Horne in his "Introduction, Vol. 2, p. 281—"Daniel was at Shushan only in vision, as appears from a strict translation of the passage. The scene of his vision was there, because Shushan was to be the capitol of the empire whose fortunes he foresaw. The statement of Pliny is that "the palace in Shushan was built by Darius Hystaspes" (His. Vol. 6. 26). Says Bertholdt, "The name Shushan itself (which signifies lily) was not given until long after Darius, and was intended to express the beauty of the edifices which that prince erected." Writers that suppose Daniel was personally of Shushan, have to torture history to make it agree with their supposition.

The natural order of history is the reverse of this, as we shall see by a comparison of historical statements. First, let it be distinctly remembered that the date of this "vision" was in the third year of Belshazzar, some eighteen years before the first of Cyrus. At this time Babylon was the capital of the Babylonian empire, and mistress of the world; and Ecbatana the capital of the Medes, built by Dioces their first king. And in 128 years from this time Astyages, the king that then reigned, was conquered by Cyrus; and then was formed the Medo Persian empire under Cyrus and his Uncle Cyaxares, called in Scripture "Darius the Median." The sole reign of Cyrus commenced about three years after the conquest of Babylon, at the death of his Uncle Darius, at which time he issued his famous decree for the restoration of the Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem; the record of which was laid up in the archives of Ecbatana, the capital city of the Medes. Ezra, 6: 2, 3. During the reign of Cyrus, the royal residence was divided. The winter residence was at Babylon, and the summer residence at Ecbatana. Cyrus built Persepolis, which became the royal seat of the Persian kings. [See Rol. His., vol. 1, p. 541). Alexander "the great" speaks of this city as "the ancient residence of the Persian monarchs, and the capital of their empire; that it was from thence all those mighty armies poured which had overflowed Greece, and whence Darius first, and afterwards Xerxes had carried the firebrand of the most accursed war which had laid waste all Europe." According to this statement of Alexander, it is evident that Persepolis had become the capital of the Persian empire in the time of Darius, and continued so through the reign of Xerxes. But Shushan was evidently the imperial seat during the reign of Artaxerxes, or Ahasuerus. (See Neh. chap. 1, 2. Esth. chap. 1–3.) Herodotus tells us (Book 5, chap. 49), that Darius had his "occasional residence" at Susa or Shushan, and there his treasures were deposited." The motive that appears to have induced Darius to deposit his treasure at Shushan was on account of its strength, being a fortified castle, rendered so both by nature and art. The Athenians sent ambassadors to Susa or Shushan, to inquire of Artaxerxes, the son of Xerxes, whether the friendship they had formed with his father Xerxes continued still in force? (Her. b. 7, c. 151.) These historical facts prove very clearly that Persepolis, instead of Shushan, was where the government was administered in the reign of Darius and Xerxes. But in the reign of Artaxerxes the capitol of the Persian empire was at Shushan, as Scripture and history both clearly demonstrate. Now as the vision of Dan. 8th is located at "Shushan the palace," from which geographical standpoint the vision is seen by the prophet, and also from which place the "ram" commenced "pushing westward, and northward, and southward," it brings the time of this "pushing" too late in the Persian history, to apply to the commencement of their great conquests over other nations which were already in the past, and the Persian empire already on the wane.

From these historical considerations it is impossible with any consistency to apply this "pushing" to military conquests, or against kingdoms for subjugation. As this "pushing" was from Shushan, therefore in the reign of Artaxerxes, and instead of being against kingdoms, it was that "no living might stand before him;" therefore it applies with great propriety to the action of the king of Persia in signing and sending forth a decree for the utter extermination of the Jews, as recorded in the book of Esther. We are informed from high authority that the word "beasts" in Daniel 8; 4, is not a good translation of the original; but that the word "living" does express the true meaning of the Hebrew, and that it refers to a class of "living" ones of more than ordinary character, and that the word being in the feminine gender, with great propriety would apply to the Jewish church and people.

Having clearly proved that Shushan was not a permanent seat of any of the kings of Persia till the reign of Artaxerxes, and also that the event that dates "the vision" transpired at "Shushan the palace," many years after the great conquests of the Persians, these considerations render it absolutely imperative for us to look for some event outside of military conquests from which to date the vision of Dan. 8th.

Now if the reader will turn to the book of Esther, he will find recorded an event of thrilling importance that transpired at "Shushan the palace" in the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, the fifth king of Persia, that agrees with the prophecy; it being no less than an awful decree, signed and sealed, and sent forth throughout the provinces of Persia, to slaughter every Jew, from the gray-headed sire down to the youngest child; and the appalling work was to be executed in one day, within the limits of the same year that the decree was signed; and "the posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment." Surely this was the "pushing" of "the ram" "eastward, and northward, and southward, that no living might stand before him," that fulfils the prophetic description.

Those who regard this "pushing" as relating to the military movements of Persia against other nations, should be able to show that those movements were restricted to the three points of compass designated in the prophecy. But this is impossible; for Cyrus, the first Persian king, extended his military expeditions into the east, as Herodotus says, "Cyrus extended his ambitious views to the Massagetæ, a great and powerful nation, whose territories extended beyond the river Araxes to the extreme parts of the east." In this conflict with the army of Tomyris, the Queen of the Massagetians, the army of Cyrus was routed and nearly annihilated. This expedition of Cyrus being eastward, contrary to the Bible account of this "pushing" of "the ram," proves that this "pushing" cannot apply to the military conquests of the Persians. The result of this "pushing" the prophecy makes to consist in the ram's doing "according to his will." But instead of this, Herodotus, Diodorus, Siculus and Justin tell us that Cyrus was cut off with all his army, consisting of 200,000 men.

Was this signal defeat of the first king of Persia doing "according to his will?" Similar disasters followed the expeditions of Cambyses, Darius and Xerxes. This was the reverse of doing "according to their will." But if the expression "he did according to his will and became great" refers to the subjugation of other kingdoms to the Persian rule, then it must have its application before the death of Cyrus, because the conquest of Babylon and the defeat of Crœsus the Sydian appears to have ended the military glory of the Persian arms. This view would require us to date the vision as early as the fall of Babylon and the conquest of the Lydians. But as the vision dates from an event located at Shushan, that took place long after the conquest of Babylon, and at a time when the Persian empire was on the decline, the absurdity as also the incorrectness of such an application of the prophecy, is clear, as it dates the vision more than a century too early. These considerations are too serious and fatal to the popular interpretation of this prophecy, to be passed over with indifference or neglect. As this "vision" is located at Shushan, there must be a special reason assigned for it. That reason we apprehend to be that an event was to transpire at "Shushan the palace" that must date "the vision," and that event must have a special relation to the Jews and Jerusalem, because seventy weeks of that "vision" was cut off upon the Jews and their city. (See Dan. 9; 24).

Let these points be closely examined in the light of the prophecy and history, for they have an important bearing on the subject in hand, and must be considered in order to arrive at just conclusions as to the meaning and date of "the vision" of this remarkable prophecy.

THE INDWELLING SPIRIT.—The indwelling of the Holy Spirit is the common mark of all believers in Christ. It is the Shepherd's mark of the flock of the Lord Jesus, distinguishing them from the rest of the world. It is the goldsmith's stamp on the genuine sons of God, which separates them from the dross of the false professors. It is the king's own seal on those who are his peculiar people, proving them to be his own property. It is the earnest which the Redeemer gives to his believing disciples, while they are in the body, as a pledge of the full redemption yet to come on the resurrection morning. This is the case of all believers. They all have the Spirit. "For if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Ryle.

WE may not be able to see how "all things work together for" our good. God does not require us to see it, but to believe it.

A PROPHETIC ECHO.

An echo is a returned sound—a repeated expression—a second communication corresponding to a first. When one man repeats what another has said, he echoes his speech or sentiment.

God prophetically announces certain events to transpire in the future; and when the servants of God or historians announce the same as transpiring, the second announcement is an echo of the first.

Divine prophecy embraces communications from God to men, of all events to transpire future from their announcement, important for men to understand to produce faith in God, a hope of future blessings and a warning of coming danger. God, in his infinite mercy and wisdom, has caused to be written a prophetic history of all the great characteristic events which involves the interests of the church, through all ages and generations; bringing dispensational change, offered mercy, or threatened judgments, to which the public eye would be drawn, or by which the condition of humanity would be affected. No such events of all the past in the physical, political and ecclesiastical departments in human history are lacking on the prophetic calendar.

God has made it the imperative duty of his watchmen to learn when foretold events are approaching or transpiring, and echo the voice of the prophets in proclaiming them as the fulfilments of the divine Word. God has made this in all cases of divine record one of the most awfully responsible duties of his servants; and upon all who fail in obedience he inflicts or decrees the most severe punishment. He has given the subject great prominence and importance in the divine economy.

The question comes thundering down from the throne of Omnipotence to his watchmen, Can you see any great events exciting the public mind, darkening the prospects of this world with its fearful shadows, but brightening the eastern sky with the dawning of a glorious day to the church? Is this generation stirred with any grave question involving the interests of the nations or the masses of our race? If so, the subject is a prophetic one, and God has not been negligent to inscribe it on the sacred page. Are the great religious classes excited over the subject of immediately changing their status and relations? thus producing an ecclesiastical revolution? If so, then it demands a prominent place in the prophetic Book.

It is a fact patent to all, that this is an age of unusual developments of great events, exciting questions and general expectancy of unprecedented human changes. First among these is the question of war among the great nations; and second, is the question of war among the antagonistic religious classes. Where in the Book of God may we expect to find his history of these things? In the eleventh chapter of Daniel we find a brief sketch of great national events, in consecutive order, from the reign of Darius, the Median, to Christ's second advent at the resurrection of the dead. Nearly all the events of that long series have taken place, according to the most learned expositors, so that the very last appear to be due.

The closing scene, running to the resurrection, is represented as involving a specific power in a very bloody, religious war, which will terminate in its destruction in Palestine. The power thus presented is designated by God as the "king of the north," which we believe is the Turkish government, Constantinople being its present capital.

The present condition of the Turkish government, connected with a religious war, is now exciting the whole world with deeper emotions and more anxieties about its future than any other subject of the age. Its nature and circumstances positively demand a place on the prophetic page. We will attempt to show that the last kingdom seen by the prophetic eye, in this chapter, running to and terminating at the general resurrection of the dead, is the present Turkish Empire.

The serial prophecy, as we said, commences with Darius. See v. 1. It then specifies his fourth successor—Xerxes the Great (see v. 2)—immediately bringing to view the Grecian kingdom under Alexander the Great, his brief universal reign and the subsequent division of his empire into four kingdoms, occupying territory towards the four cardinal points. This fact carried them to be called the kings or kingdoms of the North, South, East and West. Egypt was south, Macedon or Greece west, Thrace north, and Syria east. The prophet gave the history of but two of the four kings, the south and north, and the reason why the east and west were so soon left out of the history was evidently this, as stated by Newton, page 266, that the kingdom of the north and west were very soon conquered by and added to the kingdom of Syria, giving it the whole eastern, western and northern portions of the empire; after which Syria was called by God "The King of the North."

That Egypt is called in this prophecy the King of the South, and Syria the King of the North, is evident from the following facts: God says of them, "And in the end of years they shall join themselves together; for the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north to make an agreement: but she shall not retain the power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm: but she shall be given up, and and they that brought her, and he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times." V. 6.

This passage was fulfilled, as nearly all expositors agree, in the year B. C., 249, in the following manner: A long and desolating war existed between Antiochus Theus, king of Syria, and Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt. Antiochus desired peace; Ptolemy consented, on condition that Antiochus would divorce his wife, Laodice, and marry Bernice, the daughter of Ptolemy; thus putting the power in her arm to rule both Syria and Egypt, or give her universal dominion. Antiochus reluctantly consented to the conditions; so the two kings were joined together, or made peace. This perfectly echoed the prophet's voice—"the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north to make an agreement." But the prophet said, "She shall not retain the power of the arm;" that is, Ptolemy's daughter shall not remain queen of Syria, nor her children heirs to its throne.

History shows that Antiochus put away the second wife and her son as heirs to his throne, and recalled his first wife, and reconstituted her children the heirs. The Egyptian woman and her son were afterwards assasinated.

These historic facts so perfectly fulfil the prediction that nearly all agree in its application to Egypt, as the king of the south, and Syria, including Greece and Thrace, as the king of the north.

The prophet, after presenting the early history of these two kings, exhibits portions of the Roman history running through the Papal persecution, reaching the "time of the end." See v. 35. He then presents a godless kingdom, or one of whom he could say, "Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any god: for he shall magnify himself above all." V. 37.

This must refer to a government officially disclaiming confidence in any god, refusing to regulate or sustain the worship of any god. It was clearly fulfilled in Atheistical France, as the following passage of its history will show: "The French Republic will recognize no other worship but that of liberty, equality and eternal truth." Allison, Vol. 4, page 149. Liberty and equality were never called gods, therefore a nation acknowledging no other object of worship certainly did not "regard any god." This godless government was exactly in its place, as a link of the prophetic chain; for the great persecution of the church, by the abomination, ended between 1770 and 1780, and the Atheistic Republic was at the zenith of its glory about 1792.

THE EASTERN WAR NEWS.

The news of the week from Europe has darkened the prospects for peace, and increased the gloom of the world for coming days. The Great Powers have nerved their arms and applied their peace-making powers to the utmost, but the war current is evidently too strong for them to control.

The vast multitudes of the Czar's subjects are so inspired with revenge and national ambition, that they are like the winds of a cyclone, uncontrolable. The Czar has ordered an army of 200,000 men to the Turkish borders, and they have already commenced the march. He has also ordered large quantities of military stores from Germany, and has issued an order to call out, in advance, the next year's reserves.

Turkey is also making all possible preparations for a deadly conflict.

Austria is sounding the war bugle, and mobilizing her army with all despatch, putting every thing in order for a bloody fray.

Germany is very silently and firmly grasping the hilt of her sword, and watching like a leopard the movements of her excited neighbors.

Bismarck has agreed to guard the restive Polish subjects of the Czar, while he hurries all his forces towards the Golden Horn.

England is fairly aroused, and the lion has commenced to shake his mane and roar with terrible significance, ordering all his young lions to be fitted to plow the seas and shower iron hail among the Moscovites. Woolwich is ordered to furnish 40,000,000 cartridges in eighteen weeks. All of this is substantial proof that the four angels realize that they can hold the winds but little longer. May God have mercy upon the unsealed.

Italy is greatly excited over the prospects of a general European war, and to add to her critical condition the Pope is at the point of death, and the government has made provision for a fearful struggle connected with the election of his successor. It has voted to hold, at the death of the Holy Father, an inquest on the body. The government will then take possession of the Vatican.

Our own government is still fearfully excited, and a terrible tempest is liable to burst upon us at any moment. Our world sadly needs a peace maker. O that the coming One might speedily appear, and hush to everlasting silence war's howling winds.

ADVERTISE.

It is an age of advertising. This is a generation of advertisers. Everybody seems to feel an inspiration to publish upon every house-top, at the head of every street, in every paper and book, some strange, new and wonderful thing, past, present, or just coming. There is a mania manifested to present some new and unheard of thing, idea or prospect, some new purpose or arrangement to produce strange and marvellous change, some new and grand development. Every thing of the past is advertised as worn out, unfit for use, ready to be replaced by something superior, fitted for a brighter and more permanent future.

Everybody is advertising, directly and indirectly, their conscious convictions that this is a transition period, during which the old order of earthly things, scenes and associations must give way to an entirely new order. Politicians cry—Revise the statutes; change the rulers; down with the old thrones and dynasties; give us new and better governments! Churchmen demand that this theological confusion of the modern Babel be ended by the triumph of truth and the extermination of heresy. Every church feels convicted that the time has nearly come for this work to be done, and is publishing those convictions. The representatives of all other classes, looking at this world as it drifts, and see evidences that great changes in its condition are now impending, boldly advertise their faith that grand revolutions are at hand.

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.

The time is drawing near when the Committee appointed by the Publication Society to compile and publish a new hymn book desire to accomplish their work. Many have responded nobly to our call for new hymns and music, but we are still quite deficient in a supply, and we earnestly invite our brethren and sisters to make a general and earnest effort to send us the best hymns and music obtainable. WHEN RECEIVED?

It is certain that the Lord has promised the gift of the Holy Spirit to his children upon specified conditions, and has expressed great willingness that it should be in their possession. Some believe the gift, or baptism of the Spirit, is received at conversion, and consists in the witness of the Spirit that sins are pardoned, while others believe the gift, or baptism, is a distinct manifestation of the Spirit, after pardon, and producing results beyond what are experienced at conversion.

There are two sources of evidence by which this point may be settled, the Bible and christian experience. Of course they must be in harmony with each other. Experience is a fact, and must be admitted in evidence. Indeed the whole christian system is founded on facts declared in the sacred Scriptures. No matter how strong the opposition, it cannot alter a fact. When the smoke of battle is blown away, there stands the fact as firm as ever, unmoved and unchanged. Truth may be covered by the rubbish of error; be trampled in the dust by all its heated opposers; but though crushed to earth, it will rise again, and live to witness the defeat of all its foes. So one fact is stronger than all opinions opposing it; than all arguments that mighty men may bring against it, and would stand if the whole world were its antagonist. When its opposers are no more, it will continue in ever blooming brightness, accepted by all the wise and good.

We turn first to the Scriptures for light on this subject. All are familiar with the history of the scene on the day of Pentecost. It is said "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost. Acts 2: 4. Of course no one would claim for a moment that these persons were all uncoverted till they met in that upper room, for these were the most devoted disciples of Jesus. Among these were "Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Mathew, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, . . . and Mary the mother of Jesus." Acts 1: 13, 14. These persons had certainly been converted, but they had not received the gift, or baptism of the Holy Spirit. If all truly converted persons receive the baptism of the Spirit, when they are converted, why did not these who might be counted among those who were most thoroghly converted, of whom it was said, "They forsook all and followed him?"

It seems clear that the first cases of conversion to Christ, who must be considered as correct models for all others, did not receive the gift of the Spirit till after they were pardoned, and had become the true disciples of Jesus, walking in the christian pathway. In all cases mentioned in the Bible, the gift, or baptism of the Spirit, is spoken of as an event to take place after they became the followers of Christ. At one time Paul met "certain disciples" at Ephesus, and said unto them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Acts 19: 1–2. After that, they received the gift. In Paul's letter to the Ephesians, he says: "After that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Eph. 1: 13. When the Scriptures speak of "believers" in Christ, it means pardoned persons, who are also called "disciples." But the Ephesians received the gift of the Spirit after they believed.

This gift is for all the disciples of Jesus, whether Jew or Gentile. When Peter met some converted Gentiles at the house of Cornelius, he says: "As I began to speak the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning." Acts 11: 15. Again he says: "The promise [of the gift] is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2: 39. The promise of the gift of the Spirit in this last example is in connection with baptism. It reads: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2; 38. One is not a proper subject for baptism till after he is converted and has the witness of the Spirit that his sins are forgiven; but the gift of the Spirit is here promised after the water baptism, hence it was not received at the time of pardon.

The gift, or baptism of the Spirit, which is an endowment of power, should not be confounded with the witness of the Spirit that our sins are forgiven. At one time the apostles made a visit to the disciples at Samaria, and "prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." Acts 8: 15. These and many other Scriptures show plainly that the gift, or baptism of the Spirit, is promised only to believers after they are pardoned, and received by the Lord as his disciples.

Christian experience is in harmony with the foregoing Scriptures. Thousands upon thousands of witnesses may be found who can testify that these things are so; that after they believed, they received the gift of the Holy Ghost. Some have received it the day of their conversion, others the next day, the next week, the next year, and some not till several years after, and others not till they reach their dying beds, while others stand opposed, and do not receive it at all. Many receive it, and do not know it, and lose it again for want of proper instruction on the subject.

Usually, when the gift is received, the experience is just as marked as was the witness of pardon. As there are some real christians who cannot tell when they were converted, so there are some who have the gift of the Spirit who are not able to tell when it was received. But this class is small. Those who were pardoned without knowing when, or received the gift without the knowl of the fact, have generally been such as were looking for too great things, and therefore did not believe their prayers were answered, because their experience was not like some very remarkable one they had heard related.

Accompanying the gift of the Spirit is a great increase of love for God, his children, his word, and all pure things. The Adamic nature is so paralyzed that he can "be patient toward all men." It gives "perfect peace," "perfect love," full assurance, and and sweet rest in Jesus. It takes away all fear of the coming judgment, gives strong love for the coming of our dear Savior, yet gives patience to wait and work for him; gives love for enemies, removes all hatred, variance, covetousness, pride, deceit, lasciviousness, dishonesty, and the working of other evil propensities, and gives great liberty in prayer and testimony, and continued delight in the service of the Lord. The Bible becomes increasingly precious and plain; the prayer-meetings more than ever attractive, and all that is unchristian more distasteful than ever before. In short, all that is Christ-like in the person becomes intensified, when he receives the gift of the Spirit. The change is much like that in a church lighted by gas, burning faintly, when all at once the full force is let on, and the house is suddenly and brilliantly illuminated. It is not a new kind of gas, but more of the same, so it is not a new Spirit, but a fulness, beyond what is experienced at pardon. This is for all who will make a full consecration to Christ, to be unreservedly his for ever.

BRIEFS.—NO. 1.

E. A. STOCKMAN.

We contemplate the grand, massive characters and experiences which adorn the Bible, much as we examine some wonderful work of art, with the feeling that it is to be admired, but not copied.

We forget that every vital force, belonging to any real christian experience, inheres in all true experience. The diversity is not in kind, but in measure. We may all be Pauls, not in capacity, but in spirit, power, genuineness and vitality.

"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," wrote the great apostle to the Romans. The tone of these words is the key to his whole experience. It is not mere self-defence. It is more than argument. It rises vastly above reasoning or rhetoric. It is a grand, majestic outburst of genuine heart-triumph, soul-victory which rises into holy contempt of all empty philosophy and beggarly elements of the world.

His words glow with inspiration, victory, power. They are not the impassioned utterance of extravagant enthusiasm, but the calm, well considered declaration of a mind cultured, ardent, heroic, and fully settled. Meekness and assurance are sweetly blended. The calmness that comes of confidence is strikingly apparent. His view of worldly emptiness, as compared to real godliness, is clear and inclusive. He surrenders all for Christ with a cheerful joy that is refreshing and inspiring.

Rome was mistress of the world, and he was a son of Rome. The empire had many rare gifts to bestow; and he was well qualified to receive and honor the noblest of them. He was a brilliant young man, an attractive scholar, and already on the high road to fame. If ever one might look with contempt on Christ and his religion, surely this young imperious Roman might. And he did. He fully committed himself against the new faith. The whole tide of his impetuous nature, stung to madness by his blind Pharisaical prejudice, was driving him fiercely on, with murderous intent, against the scattered and defenceless people of the Lord.

But God, who knows how to make the wrath of men praise, met him in the way. That strangely glorious vision from heaven took all self-righteousness, hot ambition, and false zeal out of him, and made him a powerful defender of the truth which he had so bitterly hated and violently defamed. What a change! Wealth, friends, position, all gone in an hour! Self-excluded from every worldly prospect, there is left him now only Christ and his gospel; and the whole world is in arms against these.

And now, calmly reviewing all he had left and lost; with fearful sufferings already endured, and worse awaiting him, he breaks forth in this exultant strain, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." I have no regrets. I have followed no cunningly devised fable. I feel my footing in the eternal verities of God. I have struck the mind of truth. I have found the key to real power; the power of God. The gospel of Christ is enough for me; enough for my ambition, enough for my talents; enough for the adoration of my heart.

I am not ashamed of the gospel anywhere; at Corinth, at Antioch, at Athens, at Rome. I am not ashamed before councils, courts or princes. Inspiring words! Glorious, royal example!

That was a conversion. No mere shift of opinion from one dogma to another, but a real, positive, radical, moral and spiritual change. A work of Divine power which struck to the root forces of his inmost being. From such a conversion came such an experience, such a life.

This man Paul, with his wonderful deliverance and experience, is not a mere ideal, but a divinely ordered example of what all men attain to, who are willing to go wholly over to Christ.

A REQUEST.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith, please earnestly ask the Lord in prayer that I may be restored to health again, so that I can labor for the support of my family. I have been laid up with the dropsy, resulting from the canker rash. Earnestly ask the Lord to restore me. The prayer of faith shall save the sick. Dear Bro. Couch, will you also please bear my case to the throne of grace. Your Bro., waiting.

CAMPMEETING.

M. A. SEYMOUR.

With what interest I read Bro. Kellaway's description of finding his way to Springfield camp. Myself and husband have desired very much to attend Campmeeting for many years, but have not been able. About one year ago we began in earnest to make arrangements to go to Springfield. We started by private conveyance early enough to make many stops by the way, but after months of anticipation, we were doomed to disappointment.

We found, after testing our power of endurance to travel by team, that we could not ride in hot weather. Then we made extra exertions to obtain means sufficient to start by Rail, and hoped to be able to buy a cheap centennial ticket. But after trying every means in our power we failed, and were compelled to stay away. And although nearly three months have passed since, yet we cannot be reconciled. It was one of the greatest disappointments of our lives. If a few others had been as anxious for our attendance as Sr. Stoddard was, our earnest wish would have been granted, and we should have seen many of our fellow-workers in the ministry, with whose names we have become familiar through the Crisis, and had our sorely tried hearts strengthened, after so many trials in the West. Much of the time we seem to be almost alone in our work of the gospel ministry, but we expect to meet all the Lord's tried children in the camp of the saints and the beloved city.

Reading, Mich.

JOY is a prize unbought, and is freest, purest in its flow, when it comes unsought. No getting into heaven as a place will compass it. You must carry it with you, else it is not there. You must have it in you as the music of a well-ordered soul, the fire of a holy purpose, the welling up, out of the central depths, of eternal springs, that hide their waters there.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

Dear Brethren:—For the last thirty years we have been joyfully anticipating the approach of that "better country" that the early saints looked for in faith, and saw afar off. There were signs to be given, by which, even at their commencement, our heads were to be uplifted, knowing that redemption is near.

In this time of expectation, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, we have been continually cheered by the fulfillment of certain prophetic jots and tittles, that must have their place, or the Scriptures would be broken. About the last feature of that God-hating power that was to exalt himself above all that was called God, but to have "his dominion, to consume and destroy, taken away," is now being fulfilled. We see this done in the height of his expected infallibility in 1870; when amid thunderings and lightnings down goes his civil power and rule, forever.

Is there anything more to be seen of the cloud and pillar of fire? We are not left in the dark. There was to be a sharp contention by the powers of the Old World for that great commercial channel, the Dardanelles, now held by Turkey; and this is to bring on the last prophetic struggle. And this struggle is now being inaugurated. The eyes of the world are upon Turkey. And she is on the point of destruction. Russia is marshaling her army for the conflict, and other nations stand trembling, not ready to help hold up the tottering monarchy. The hour must come. The cessation of arms and cry of peace may postpone it a little, but it is inevitable. Turkey is doomed. God has spoken. "He shall come to his end, and none shall help him." Then what? Michael shall stand up. When? "At that time." What time? When the Turkish government ends. Here is where Michael steps in and proclaims his right to reign.

It is a time of trouble such as never was; a time of the direst extremity, when he stands up to deliver his people, whose names are written in the Book. The graves are visited. "The earth casts out her dead." No covering for her slain after this. The prophetic echo now is, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Christ now has given to him glory, dominion, and a kingdom, and he, whose right it is, reigns over the house of Jacob forever and ever. Amen. Here is where we are, amid the fulfillment of the last prophetic utterances. Let all be ready in this terrific, coming storm, to welcome the coming Deliverer, so that we may be housed till the indignation be overpast.

From Sr. J. W. Stone.

Dear Editor:—I desire through the medium of our dear Crisis, to praise and give thanks to my Heavenly Father for his great goodness,—especially for the past few months,—toward me and mine. God has spared to me the life of my dear child, even while I doubted his loving kindness; and I faithfully promised him in prayer if he would only give him back to me, spare my darling Willie's life, I would consecrate myself with all my household anew to his service. O! my dear friends, I believe that we are living in the last hours of time, and, if we mean to be saved when Christ comes, we must deny ourselves and follow the Lamb of God whithersoever he leads us. It is my highest ambition while here on earth to be a faithful and devoted child of God; and when that last great day shall dawn, when the dear ones now sweetly sleeping in Jesus shall arise from their dusty pillows to inherit the promised possession, and we shall all stand before the throne of God, may I with my dear companion and children be accounted worthy to enter in through the gates into the "City of our God," to go hence no more forever.

Pray for me, dear ones in Jesus, that the peace of God which passeth all understanding may rest upon, and greatly bless your unworthy friend and sister.

I love to read your letters in the Crisis, and I do often feel to say with you, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I long to walk the golden streets of the new Jerusalem, to dwell in the presence of my great high Priest and Redeemer, who hath done so much for us. He died on Calvary's cross, that we may, if we only will, live forever in the "Paradise of God."

"And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." "He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly! Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Charlestown, Mass, Nov. 4th, 1876.

From Bro. S. S. Hayward.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—I am glad to take this opportunity to address you through the columns of the Crisis. To those who are waiting to hear from me I will say, I arrived here on Friday, Oct. 13th, and was very glad to find Bro. John A. Cargile looking for me, and to find a welcome at his house.

On the following day I started with him on a Mission trip, and have been almost every day since in the field, trying to use my talent in the Master's service. I find he has done a great work here, and wherever we have been we have found a good audience ready to listen to the Word. The calls come from every quarter, "Come and preach at our place." We also find much opposition from the modern Pharisees and Sadducees, which helps to spread the truth.

When I proposed to come here, among the many scarecrows the enemy produced to prevent me, was one to the effect that I, being a Northerner, would find a very cold reception here, and perhaps be Ku Kluxed. I wish to say to the credit of this people, and to help remove prejudice at the North, that I have been received thus far with a hearty welcome in every place, and the people, where I have chanced to tarry, have shown us great kindness. I think of those houses and kind friends that Jesus told Peter about when he said, "Behold, we have left all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?" Matt. 29: 27. I am glad Peter asked that question and answered it, for I have found it to be true; and I expect that eternal life will be given, in the world to come, to every one that fulfills the part of the contract that belongs to man, which is, "to leave all and follow Jesus."

I desire to say to the dear ones that I am personally acquainted with in the North, that I would be very glad to receive a letter of cheer from them, and will try to answer any letter that may come to me from any of the dear ones in the faith, though I have never met with them. Remember me also in your prayers, and Bro. C. too, that we faint not, but endure to the end. Lord, let thy kingdom come, is the prayer of your Bro. in the hope.

Stevenson, Ala., Nov. 9th.

From D. C. Thomas.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in the Lord:—It is three years this present month since the Lord forgave my sins. In Dec. following, the Lord took from me an idol that I cherished very much. I am now free from tobacco. To God be all the praise. The next June I was buried in baptism. The Lord blessed me wonderfully. And soon after baptism the command came, "Go preach." But I strove against the Spirit till about two years had fled.

One year ago this month I came to this place, and as I saw the multitude on the road to destruction, my heart was stirred within me. I commenced preaching, and the Lord has blessed my labors. I have organized one Sabbath-school; and a number of places where the Sabbath was spent in visiting, there are now good meetings. Last spring I wrote for papers and tracts, and received a good supply, and they are telling in bringing the truth before the people.

On Sunday, Oct. 29th, I went nine miles and found a good congregation waiting to hear them Word; and I talked to the from Eccl. 11: 9, and as I reasoned with them of truth, righteousness, and judgment to come, they bowed the head and wept. The Lord bowed the heavens and came down and filled the house; and as soon as I was done preaching, without an invitation, one man arose and requested prayers, and several others followed. To God be all the glory.

As soon as meeting closed, several came and asked for papers or tracts, but I was sorry I had none to give. One man told me if he could get the money, the next time he saw me he would have our paper. The truth is spreading. Praise the Lord! You who live close by meetings know but little of the hardships of a missionary.

I have had the misfortune to lose my horse this fall, so I shall be obliged to go afoot, which will somewhat hinder my labors. But the Lord owns the heavens and the earth, and he is my portion, and he will not ask me to do anything without opening a way to do it. Should I receive any more papers or tracts, I could make good use of them. I was intending to go into new places where the Word has not been preached. Brn. and Srs., I want your prayers.

Cuba, Alleghany Co., N. Y.

From Bro. T. L. augh.

Dear Brn. and Srs.—We are commanded to exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Oh! how I praise God for his holy Word, which shows us where we are. We have the light shining from that Word and reflected from surrounding events, that tell us plainly we are almost to the judgment. I exhort you all to keep close to Jesus; obey him fully, and eternal life will be yours in a little from this. Let us "be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." We shall not escape trials, for they are experienced by all Christians; and God sees we need them to develop our christian character. We need not be discouraged, so long as our trust is in God. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." Do not distrust him. Let the Spirit and the Word be your only and constant guide. Satan has his winds of doctrine and cunningly devised fables to lead men away from God.

It is a time when we need to be firmly established, both on truth and in righteousness, that we may withstand all the fiery darts of the wicked. My feet are on the rock Christ Jesus, where by the help of God I shall stand, unmoved by sin and Satan, hidden in the cleft of the rock. Safe in Jesus' keeping. I shall face the foe till the strife is ended, and the victory won.

From Bro. Wm. Gorgass.

I have thought for some time to send you a few lines to let you know that there is one here that takes the Crisis. And it is a messenger of good cheer to me.

I am waiting for Christ to come the "second time without a sin offering unto salvation." There will be many disappointed in that day. I wish all could see the true light of the gospel. It was through the Crisis that I first saw the true light. I saw then that there was pardon for sin. I was buried in the likeness of my blessed Redeemer, and was delivered from the snares of the devil. O that all could believe on the blessed Son of God! But soon, if we are all faithful, we shall see him as he is.

The Bible is now the most precious book I ever had. The prophecies are grander to me each day. I do thank God, through the Redeemer, that he gave me wisdom to see the true light, that I may have a crown, if I only remain faithful to the end.

THE BIBLE.

MARY A. ELLIOTT.

It is the Book of books. We are commanded to search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life. The blessing promised is not only to those who read, but they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things written therein. But how much the Bible is neglected by those who profess to love the Lord. Newspapers, magazines, and Sabbath-school books take its place. It is occasionally read by some, and here and there one reads it carefully to know the will of God.

I praise God for the Bible; and if we follow its teachings it will lead us into all truth, and in the way of life. In the blessed Book we find a remedy for sin. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. There are many precious promises to the child of God, while journeying through this world of sin and sorrow. O how comforting! It teaches how to talk, walk, dress; and how to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

Everything that is profitable for the Christian can be found in the Word of God. It tells of riches that will stand the test of the burning day, which Peter speaks of, when the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

The great day of God is near. It hasteth greatly. Who may abide the day of his coming? Some scoff, and say all things continue as they were from the beginning; some fear to think of it. But there are a few faithful ones looking forward to that day for the consummation of their hope. Reader, you and I will be there in that day to be acquitted or condemned.

Lowell, Mass.

A PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

From year to year we have been accustomed to pause in our daily pursuits and set apart a time to offer our thanks to Almighty God for the special blessings He has vouchsafed to us, with our prayers for a continuance thereof.

We have at this time equal reason to be thankful for His continued protection, and for the many material blessings his bounty has bestowed.

In addition to these favors accorded to us as individuals, we have especial occasion to express our hearty thanks to Almighty God that by his providence and guidance our Government, established a century ago, has been enabled to fulfill the purpose of its founders in offering an asylum to the people of every race, securing civil and religious liberty to all within its borders, and equality before the laws.

It is moreover, especially our duty to offer our humble prayers to the Father of all mercies for a continuance of his divine favor to us as a nation and as individuals.

By reason of all these considerations, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend to the people of the United States to devote the thirtieth day of November next to the expression of their thanks and prayers to Almighty God; and, laying aside their daily avocations and all secular occupations, to assemble in their respective places of worship and observe such day as a day of thanksgiving and rest.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington this twenty-sixth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and first.

By the President, U. S. GRANT.

Obituaries.

KNIGHT. In Worcester, Mass., Nov. 1st, 1876, of consumption, Sr. Jerusha Knights, aged seventy-five years.

Sister Knights was a devoted, consistent christian, steadfast and faithful, always ready to help the cause of Christ by helping the poor and needy. Her religion was of deeds as well as words. She was a lover of Jesus and his appearing. But disease has been preying upon her twenty years, and at last triumphed. She died after a terrible conflict, and now sleeps in death. Sister Marsh, her sister, in whose family she lived many years, has lost almost her last stay, the children almost a mother, and the church a faithful member. I comforted the friends with a recital of her faith, which she had held unwavering for years, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the coming Savior, to introduce all the good and faithful to the paradise of God. May the remaining relatives be in readiness to meet their loved one where partings will never come. L. BOUTELL.

DOE. In Whitefield, Me., Aug. 24th, Bro. Harrison Doe, aged sixty-two years.

Bro. Doe was a kind and faithful husband and father, a warm-hearted christian, and a highly esteemed citizen. His disease was cancer in the bowels, which caused great suffering. He leaves a wife, with whom he had lived twenty-nine years, six children, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. He became a christian at the age of twenty-four, and in 1858 became interested in the doctrine of the coming of the Lord; and from that time until his death made that his theme. He fell like a faithful sentinel at his post, with the assurance that he should soon put on immortality. He bore all his sufferings with great resignation. Bro. Hall spoke words of comfort, and remarks were made by the writer. May the hope of the gospel sustain our dear sister and the children in this heavy affliction. JESSE PARTRIDGE.

HAYNES. In Richmond, N. B., Sept. 23d, 1876, Peter Haynes, aged seventy-two years.

Our father sleeps in Jesus. Through long years he had loved the Lord, and now, folded away in the cold narrow house—for him the vestibule to the many mansions—he waits the morning when He, whom, having not seen he had loved so long and so well, shall come to gather his beloved into his eternal rest. In the house he has left there is an empty place which none but he can fill; yet, above all the sorrow and weeping of death, we hear the blessed words: "Say ye to the righteous that it shall be well with him; for they shall eat the fruit of their doings." And we are sure there is also a place in the many mansions of "our Father's house" which only he shall fill. "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him." Sermon by Elder M. W. Corliss, of Milltown, Me., from 1 Thess. 4: 15.

"Thou hast another chamber, dear Lord,—
The secret place of peace,—
Where thy precious ones are safely stored
When their weary wanderings cease.
No sighs are heard in that shadowy place,
No voices of them that weep;
They have fought the fight and finished the race,—
God giveth them rest in sleep."

WELLS. In Ontario, N. Y., Oct. 28th, of consumption of the blood, Charlie E., infant son of Eld. Jas. E. and Sr. E. A. Wells, aged nine months.

At the time of our darling's death I was in a very low state of nervous prostration, brought on by a combination of neuralgia, inflammation of the kidneys, congestion of the lungs and spinal affection. The intense suffering of our babe and his death so reacted upon me that my life again was despaired of, but our kind and heavenly Father had mercy upon me, and stayed the ravages of disease, and I am slowly recovering my health. The services were held at our house, and my father, R. G. Wells, was called upon to attend the funeral services of his little grandchild. The scene was impressive beyond description, but we know that Charlie sweetly sleeps in Jesus, and in the sweet bye and bye we shall see the same bright eyes. Pray for us in our affliction. JAS. E. WELLS.

PAGE. In Auburn, Me., Oct. 11th, 1876, of catarrhal consumption, Thomas H. Page, aged forty-six years.

Bro. Page's home and kind hands will be well remembered by many of our preaching brethren, who have been so well and kindly cared for by him and his wife. He has been a great sufferer, not being able to speak aloud for months, on account of disease in the throat. He was anxious to live for his family, and expressed a desire to have the brethren pray for him, saying he thought there was faith enough in the church to raise him up. He said to us not long ago he thought he should live until Jesus comes; but he sleeps. Bro. Page leaves a wife and one daughter, who feel their loss deeply. May this affliction be sanctified to them. Funeral attended by the writer. GEO. A. STREETER.

SWAISEY. In Cabot, Vt., Oct. 9th, Sr. Sophronia Swaisey, wife of Bro. Parker Swaisey, aged sixty-seven years.

Sister S. gave her heart to the Lord in her youth, and maintained a consistent christian character until the day of her death. During the last year of her life she suffered greatly, but bore it all with much patience, often expressing her hope in Christ. She leaves an aged companion and children to mourn her loss. May they live in readiness to meet her on the renewed earth. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Rev. 14: 13. A. GORDON.

WILSON. In Ontario, N. Y., Sept. 22d, of diptheria, Nellie C., daughter of Bro. Geo. and Sr. Maria Wilson, aged four years.

In the loss of little Nellie, Bro. and Sr. Wilson do not suffer an irreparable and eternal one, but believing in Him who is immutable and cannot lie, they await the last trumpet's sound, when its echo shall pierce the silent chamber walls, and awake to immortal life Nellie and all of Rachel's jewels, that shall brighten the crown of our glorified Redeemer. Words of comfort were spoken from 2 Kings 4: 26, by the writer. "Is it well with the child? It is well." JAS. E. WELLS.

MORSE. In North Scarboro, Me., Aug. 23d, Alonzo Morse, aged fifty years.

Adventists who have visited North Scarboro will remember Mr. Morse as one at whose home they always met with a cordial reception. He seemed to take special delight in entertaining our preaching brethren. As a citizen and neighbor he was highly respected. Those who were with him during his last sickness are confident that he sought and found the Savior. He leaves a wife and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. C. H. SWEET.

CLEMENT. In Moultonborough, N. H., Aug. 4th, of heart disease, Polly N., wife of Daniel L. Clement, aged sixty-nine years.

She lived a christian life, and died in the enjoyment of the christian's hope. M. W. P.

SICK.

Bro. Couch:—I would say to brethren and friends that my wife is quite low; has been sick six weeks. We desire the prayers of faith in her behalf, that God would raise her up to comfort the dear saints. Your Bro. in Christ. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Our P. O. address will be for the present at Hinesburgh, Vt. I. D.

Let all the faithful pray for our sister. ED.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and endurance. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per one hundred, or 15 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are anxious, perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of the nations. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 30 cts. per dozen, by mail.

Address I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

☞ For sale as above at the Crisis Office.

ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES.

This is an ably conducted weekly paper, edited by Elder Frank Burr, and published under the auspices of the Western A. C. Publishing Society. It gives prominence to the personal coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of sinners, and the eternal salvation of saints on the renovated earth. It also insists on a holy life as essential to an admittance into the coming kingdom. $2.20 a year. Address Advent Christian Times, 91 South Green St., Chicago, Ill. The World's Crisis and Adv. Chris. Times sent postpaid to subscribers who will take both, at the reduced rate of $4.00 per year in advance for both papers. Address World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

This is a large, illustrated, monthly paper, devoted to a critical exposition of Bible Truth and an earnest advocacy of Bible Salvation. It is the aim of the publishers and editors to make it liberal in spirit, vigorous in tone, sound in theology, free from hobbies, and radical in maintaining a positive and saving religion. The Banner is now edited by A. A. Phelps, Wm. Sheldon, and D. T. Taylor. Terms: One Dollar a year, strictly in advance. Subscriptions may begin with any month. Liberal terms to agents. Sample copy free. Address Bible Banner, Vineland, N. J.

Notices.

NOTICE.—The Philadelphia Advent Christian Conference will hold its semi-annual session in Philadelphia, Pa., at the Advent Christian Church, Eighth Street, above Noble, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is earnestly requested that all preachers and churches within the limits of this Conference will be represented at these meetings, either personally, by letter, or delegates. We want to hear from all, that we may know what is being done for the spread of gospel truth. All letters of communication to be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street.
WM. ASHMAN, President.
E. KING, Secretary.

VERMONT QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.—The next session of the Vermont Conference will be holden at St. Johnsbury, commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 12th, and continue as long as the Lord will. Pray, brethren, and sacrifice to come and work for sinners. Come from afar, and heaven will bless you. A. A. HOYT, Conf. Elder.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—If the Lord will, a Protracted Meeting will be held in the meeting-house at Upper Bartlett, N. H., Wednesday evening, Dec. 13th, and over Sunday, Dec. 17th. Bro. J. B. Deering will be with us to assist in proclaiming the Word. A cordial invitation is extended to all the waiting ones in this locality.
E. S. MOULTON, Committee.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.—The Fourth Meeting of the New Hampshire A. C. Conference will be held with the Church in Rye, N. H., commencing Thursday, Nov. 23d, 1½ P. M., and hold over Sunday, Nov. 26th. We hope there will be a general gathering in the name of the Lord, therefore we extend a cordial invitation to all, both ministers and people, to come with the whole armor on to work with the Lord.
Com.: N. Wheeler, C. E. Hurd, C. H. Fletcher.

New York State Adv. Chris. Conf.

The semi-annual meeting of the above named Conference will be held with the church at East Shelby, Monroe Co., N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 30th, and holding over the following Sabbath, Dec. 3d. As this is but the second meeting this year, and the last until next June, we hope for a general attendance of ministers and believers. Let every church take up the collection for Home Missionary work, and send their quota of delegates, brethren or sisters. Homes will be provided for all who come. Pray for this meeting.
M. R. MILES.
J. E. WELLS.

No Railroad arrangements received.

NOTICE.—An adjourned meeting of the R. I. and East Conn. A. C. Conference will be held with the A. C. Church at Natick, R. I., commencing Wednesday, at two oclock P. M., Dec. 6th, and holding over the 8th. It is desired that every church will send its delegates and minister, as the new Constitution will be brought up for consideration, with other business of importance. All wishing copies of the proposed new Constitution can obtain them by addressing N. A. Angell, North Scituate, R. I.
N. A. ANGELL, Conference Clerk.

NOTICE.—I would like to remind those who gave me pledges for Bro. and Sr. Brundage, at the Springfield and Alton Bay camp last year (1875), that there has not been paid over one quarter of the amount, and that it is very much needed by them, as they are laboring efficiently in their "corner," and you ought not to forget them; hence I write this "to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance"—a good way indeed. Let this be sufficient. Send to Bro. Geo. T. Adams for Bro. Brundage. R. D. GRANT.

NOTICE.—There will be a Protracted Meeting of the A. C. Church, held with the Salt Creek Church, at the Little school-house in Republic Co., Kansas, commencing Dec. 28th, and holding over two Sundays. The North Western Quarterly Conference of Kansas will meet some time during the meeting at the call of the President. Eld. J. C. Smith, the State Evangelist, is expected to be present. Everybody is cordially invited to attend, and all ministering brethren are requested to be present to help preach the Word.
THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Sec. of the N. W. Quar. Conf. of Kansas.

NOTICE.—I would say to all wishing my labors that I have removed to South Sandisfield, where I shall preach part of the time. My address, with that of E. W. Tefft, will hereafter be South Sandisfield, Mass. WARREN TEFFT.

NOTICE.—I would say to those churches who have requested me to preach for them, that I am now at liberty to do so, as the Lord may open the way. Address me at 61 Bellevue Avenue, Providence, R. I. A. W. SIBLEY.

NOTICE.—A protracted meeting will commence at Water Village, N. H., Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue as long as may seem duty. Brn. G. F. Haines and M. Stevens are expected to be present and assist in preaching the Word. Brethren and sisters from abroad will be heartily welcomed. Ample provision will be made for man and beast. C. H. SWEET.

CONFERENCE.—The Third Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church, known as the Washington County Conference, is hereby called to meet with the Church at Sherman Centre, Washington Co., Kansas, on Friday evening, Dec. 1st, at 6.30 P. M., and hold over Sunday. We expect a goodly number of preaching brethren to be present. There will be business of importance to transact, and it is hoped every church will be represented by properly accredited delegates. Homes will be provided for all who come. Sherman is in south side of county. J. W. HAYWORTH, Pres.

NOTICE.—The first Quarterly Meeting of the New York Conference for the present year will be held with the church in Kendal Nov. 25th and 26th. We desire to see our brethren and sisters in this vicinity at the meeting. M. R. MILES.

NOTICE.—At the last annual meeting of the Vermont Conference, a resolution was passed to encourage the churches to take up collections once in four weeks to aid the State Missionary work. Let this work be attended to.
H. B. QUIMBY, Recorder.

NOTICE.—The Second Annual session of the York County A. C. Conference will be held in the Second Advent Chapel at Biddeford, Me., commencing Thursday, Dec. 7th, at two o'clock P. M. A full attendance is desired.
C. H. SWEET, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Advent Christian Church of Rochester, N. Y., will hold Bible Readings every Tuesday evening at their hall on Main Street Bridge, beginning Nov. 14th.
GEO. E. WAUGH, Church Clerk.

NOTICE.—The Lord will, there will be a Protracted Meeting at Dixville, P. Q., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and hold over Sunday, Dec. 10th.
U. G. LADD.
JOHN MAGOON.

NOTICE.—There will be a Protracted Meeting in Haverhill, N. H., at the Advent Church, commencing Saturday evening, Nov. 25th, and hold as the interest demands.
G. M. LITTLE.
D. W. DAVIS.

☞ Preaching brethren wishing to visit the church at Plainville, Ct., will please correspond with Wm. Harris or G. S. Hastings.

Attention All, Please!

I have a proposal to make. Who will help in this matter? Several important facts have come to my knowledge, which leads me to make the following offer. With gratitude to God I learn that the "History of the Second Advent Message" has been put into several college and seminary libraries, where the results are clearly manifest in awakening some of the "faculty" and students to investigate and become especially interested in the doctrine of Christ's coming and kindred truths. They express surprise that such an amount of mission work has been done in this form, and such men of known ability and piety engaged in it while they were ignorant of it. It has also fallen into the hands of several ministers of different churches, where the results are the same. I am convinced that much good can be done by awakening such men as stand in the front of society. I want to sacrifice some to help it along. It is now the special season to make gifts to friends for two months to come. The retail price of the History is $3.50. Postage is now 20 cts. on each. The actual cost of the book to me in publishing was $3.00 each. I now offer one hundred copies of it to be ordered before Jan. 1st, 1877, to any persons who will order to give to libraries of Institutions, or other public libraries, or who will keep them to lend to ministers and other readers, or who will give them to ministers, for $2.50 each, postpaid. No others should expect them at this price, a it is 70 cts. less than cost on each. Address all such orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Appointments

☞ APPOINTMENTS MUST BE RECEIVED AS EARLY AS TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following RESOLUTION was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"RESOLVED, That no appointments be published in the CRISIS henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"RESOLVED, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass.

THE UNCHANGEABLE.

There's nought on earth to rest upon,
All things are changing here;
The smiles of joy we gaze upon,
The friends we count most dear.
One Friend alone is changeless—
The one too oft forgot,
Whose love has stood for ages past—
Our Jesus changeth not.

The sweetest flower on earth
That sheds its fragrance round,
Ere evening comes has withered,
And lies upon the ground.
The dark and dreary desert
Has only one green spot:
'Tis found in living pastures,
With Him who changeth not.

And clouds o'ercast our summer sky,
So beautiful, so bright!
And while we still admire it,
It darkens into night.
One sky alone is cloudless,
There darkness enters not;
'Tis found alone with Jesus—
And Jesus changeth not.

And friendship's smile avails not
To cheer us here below;
For smiles are all deceitful,—
They quickly ebb and flow.
One smile alone can gladden,
Whate'er the pilgrim's lot;
It is the smile of Jesus—
For Jesus changeth not.

And thus our bark moves onward
O'er life's tempestuous sea,
While death's unerring hand
Is stamped on all we see;
But faith has found a living One,
Where hope deceiveth not,
For life is hid with Jesus,
And Jesus changeth not.

—Selected.

THOUGHTS BY NIGHT AND DAY.

C. COLEGROVE.

The Crisis has a clean face. Not only is its legibility excellent, but its proof-reading is good; for typographical errors are rare. Some papers are exceedingly negligent in this respect, and a contributor's ears involuntarily redden, or his heart sinks when he sees barbarisms of expression which he did not write. It is worth while to reach twenty thousand eyes with the pen when we could not reach two hundred with articulate speech.

That many are edified, encouraged or comforted is a happy reflection. If Christ is pleased and honored, the great end is achieved. Jesus will pay well when pay day comes. Let us do good. But he who writes should be careful what and how he writes. Quality is worse than quantity. Some have, sometimes, erred and been bitterly sorry, and error has taught them caution. As Moses learned how to be meek, because he hastily slew an Egyptian, so we, who are less than Moses, may learn wisdom through the experience of imperfections.

God will train his people through imperfections and tribulations. He will make them strong through experience. Let us be careful what we say. Having little or nothing to say is not a qualification for speaking. People are urged, sometimes, to speak in meeting who really have no impression of duty, and have a conscious vacancy of mind. Teasing, entreating, or scolding to educe utterance may not be always safe. Sometimes there is quite a desire for many testimonies without proper regard for the results. There are sometimes, floating mists of uncertainty in regard to the highest ground of experience. However, this is by suggestion, not reproof.

Deep conviction is an element of power. People with convictions make a mark; though it is true if the convictions are mistaken, the mark may not be most profitable. Earnestness is a great virtue in a good work, especially when united with discretion. An earnest and wise man is strong; yet, as the gate is strait and the road narrow for God's pilgrims, let us be earnest with caution.

How active is the human mind! David had a "multitude of thoughts within him." The pulsating brain is ever busy under the incessant push of arterial force. How ought our thoughts to be right, wise and true. Yet many of us know that both reason and imagination need the power of a rectifying God. Our aim of life may be upright, and we may be advancing, but how can perfection come until immortality comes? We must have a reconstituting energy of God by the resurrection, or by a translation. We continually come to a restoring Jesus. We have not become independent of the Physician, and our hourly coming to him gives us acquaintance.

We commit great and precious interests into his care; not to be forgotten and neglected, but to be promoted; and by faith we know they will be. He who receives a great trust is incited to honor it. Love, truth and vigilance are appealed to by the entrusting party. Will not God honor every proper trust in his faithfulness and ability?

No great blessing can, usually, be with safety bestowed without a preparation for its reception. Hence, necessity, desire and faith should precede the gift and experience of salvation. He who has never desired or sought riches of glory in Christ, would be unprepared to receive the masterly gift; and if not ready, would not know how use a most priceless gift; could not appropriate it, might even reject it. The coming of Christ needs, therefore, to be expected and waited for. Who will prize it so really as they who have longed for it? Who will be so enriched by it as they who have mourned and grieved for the want of it?

There is coming a grand coincidence. It will be the coincidence of two states of readiness, that of Christ and his saints. Some of God's people may be ready for Christ's appearing, but Christ is not yet ready to appear; at least he has not hitherto been. The will of the Father, we suppose, governs this grand event. When Jesus does come, it will be when things with him are perfectly ready, and happy will they be who are ready to meet him. This will be a great coinciding readiness.

Until Christ comes, there will be no true perfection, except formative perfection of character. The world is sick and bleeding. The very waiting saints are not without an aching void, which a literally descending and present Jesus alone can remedy. The finest physical organism is yet frail and corruptible. Parasite animalcules infest a figure the most symmetrical, or a stature the most imposing. Cough, neuralgia, rheumatism, and fever, are free-booting through the world. Take away the "spirit of life," and decomposition, disdaining courtesies or bribes, flourishes the implements of his power.

Some people think it is useless to pray. They think that God will certainly not attend to many details of prayer, and that things go by necessity according to such strict and inexorable laws, that it is useless to even seem or attempt to court Divine interposition. Some think so from original and never-suspended unbelief, and others from some failure to obtain sundry asked-for gifts. God does not give everything asked for by every man with every manner and in every time of asking. That is true enough. God gives what is best at the best time. God gives what he has promised when asked in faith. God gives good gifts, but men sometimes ask for what is not best for them to have. Disappointments in some cases may be mysterious, but perseverance in prayer is saint-like, and God will reward a man well some day. To give up praying is pusallanimity and backsliding. To pray on is the only alternative.

Let all saints ask God's direction in everything. That is, how to follow good and escape evil, or overcome it. Ask God's management of your interest, and of his interest in the best manner pssssible. And God's interest is yours, and yours his. Some have asked Christ a thousand times to come and take them, but he has not. The asking is just as right as for a wife to ask her husband in Europe to return home. She never ceases to say in every letter, "Do come home as soon as you can." Is not this affectionate call highly prized? Surely that husband will come in due time, and no doubt in quick time. Christ's coming may be very near indeed. We know no set time in the treasures of reserved knowledge and Divine purpose, yet we look with interest to the very next twelve or fifteen months; watching, though knowing nothing, yet watching and expecting.

An apocalyptic angel swears that "time shall be no longer." Suppose it were read "a time shall be no longer." If a time is three hundred and sixty years, in year day reckoning, and the date of the declaration was the year of Luther's posted thesis in Wittemberg in 1517,—I say—if such is, or were, or could be the case, then we might say the advent is indeed imminent.

Again, if there was every reason for taking a day to mean a month, which no one would think a rational thing to do; nevertheless, it is singular that to seventeen hundred and seventy-six, the great declaration of American independence, twelve hundred and sixty added months bring us to eighteen hundred and eighty-one, which is the end, or about the end of the Great Pyramid Grand Gallery. What that means for America I know not. We have come into times critical and hurrying, and there we leave it.

Now then, in all the multitude of our thoughts and cares,—and O how sweet will be deliverance from care!—in all our burden-bearing, let us be bearers of our burdens to Christ, to seek sympathy, pity and rest. Who would not have his heart searched thoroughly by the gentle and keen eyes of the most effectual Searcher, that healing may follow seeing, and cleansing may follow searching, and holy renewing follow strict and perfect examination? What man of God would elude God's scrutiny?

How is it possible to pray for the dead? We will not have long to wait to hear a responded impossible. But yet there is one happy thought. Suppose a dear friend is dead. A father or a mother it may be, who has labored fondly and arduously to give training and power to a son that lives while they sleep. Why should not a son or a daughter pray God that the dead parent's labor may be fruitful through them? Why should they not strive and desire to be good, that God may the more largely bless and richly reward in the judgment those who though now pulseless and breathless, yet once were alive as we? Why not? If we can do good, those who once helped us may be the happier for it hereafter.

We must now close. Our God is in the heavens. Nay, he built the heavens. He is an astronomical God. What exactness, magnitude, and marvelous majesty in his works! What worlds on high, and what laws govern them! We should be exceedingly afraid of such a wise and scrupulously exact Being, if there was not a Mediator. What power in the blood that can reconcile us to such a Master of mechanics, such a globe Creator, such a Propeller of vast worlds, such an august Author of order and harmony! Thank God that faith, through a revelation, is given to cheer us in the depth of our astonishment, while we ponder the wonders of vastness, number, order, proportion, and the majesty of power working with law.

LETTER FROM BRO. A. M. B. GRAHAM.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Thinking that a few lines from Georgia might be read with interest by some of the many readers of the Crisis, I send you a letter for publication.

I am the only Adventist preacher in this section, and it seems lonely enough, I assure you; and I often think that those who have the blessed privilege of hearing the Word preached by our brethren every week, do not fully appreciate the inestimable blessing. I cannot say that I am alone, for my affectionate wife is here to share with me every sorrow and every joy; and better still, our Savior is with us, and smiles upon us with pardoning love, and we can rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

I regret very much my inability to give more or all of my time to the spreading of the truth. Being poor in this world's goods, I am compelled to work diligently with my hands to support those whom God has placed under my charge. This, however, I am very willing to do, and preach as the way opens.

In this city I united with the "Young Men's Christian Association" in hope of proclaiming the present truths to many whom I could not otherwise reach. As the Assossiation is composed of various denominations, doctrinal points are seldom discussed; still, I have presented some of our doctrines for their consideration. I preached to them to-day (Nov. 5th) on "The Eternal Salvation," which seemed to be well received. People here are very much prejudiced, and wife and I try to remove it by the grace of God, right living, and kind words; and we succeed to a considerable extent.

For a few months past I have had the pleasure of corresponding with Bro. J. S. Wimbish, of Macon, Ga., and on Oct. 14th I went to see him at his request. On the morning of Sunday, Oct. 15th, I baptized him in the river near his place; after which we went to Lake Academy (about four miles from Macon) to hear a Methodist brother preach at 11 A. M. At 4 P. M., I preached on the "Life and Death" question, and at the conclusion of the discourse ordained Bro. Wimbish to the work of the ministry and admitted him into the Southern A. C. Conference.

I found him a worthy christian gentleman. He embraced our views about four years ago, after reading Bro. Whitmore's "Doctrine of Immortality," and withdrew from the Methodist church. Since then he has been a reader of the A. C. Times.

For a long time he sought baptism at the hands of the Orthodox clergy, but they repeatedly refused to adminster it. I am glad that it has been my privilege to bury the brother in baptism, as I fully believe he came forth from the watery grave determined to work more for Jesus. Before I went there he preached occasionally, but will now devote more time and attention to the work.

Let all God's pilgrims aid the brother by their prayers. May he stand firm unto the end. May God bless him and his family, and may they all be brought at last into the everlasting kingdom of God's dear Son.

What a glorious gathering there will be when we all get home! May God help the waiting ones, scattered abroad, to be faithful a little longer. Soon the trials, sorrows and labors of this life will end in that eternal rest that remaineth to the people of God. Pray for us. Your brother, waiting.

MISSION REPORT.

My last was from Etewah County, Oct. the 18th. In company with Eld. S. R. Hood, of Oak Hill, Ala., I set out for Cherokee Co. At night I preached at Bro. Glenn's, to a house and porch full of very attentive hearers. Bro. Glenn is an old Baptist, who, with several others of the same church, have recently been shut out of the house which they had contributed mostly to build for their own use, because they had embraced the precious truths that make the second coming of Christ so dear to us. Although Bro. G. holds a debt on the church for unpaid subscriptions, and might sell it for the debt, yet he says he will not trouble them for it; but, if the Lord will, he will build a house of worship on his own land without lock or bar to keep any of God's people out.

19th. Had an appointment at Round Mountain Furnace at night; but, owing to a rain storm, but few were out. Bro. Hood and myself gave them a talk which we believe interested some. May the Lord make it fruitful. 20th. We met a few of the dear ones at Liberty Church, where the first quarterly meeting of the Southern A. C. Conference was to meet. There being but few present, and Bro. Cargile not having yet arrived, we did not proceed to business, but we had religious exercises at noon and night. The good Spirit was with us.

21st. Bro. Cargile met with us, also Bro. Samuel B. Hayward, late of Mass. We feel very thankful to the Lord for sending such a brother to help us hold up the banner of truth in the South. May the Lord bless him, and make him a blessing to many among us. There is much room and many openings in the South for the work of God-fearing, self-sacrificing men.

Our Conference met and attended to its business, a report of which will be sent soon to the World's Crisis for publication. We had several stirring discourses by Brn. Cargile, Hayward, Hood, Livingston and others. We had some precious social meetings, in which a number of brethren and sisters, old and young, testified for Jesus. Many persons rejoiced in hope of speedy redemption. Sinners wept and pledged themselves to make a start for the kingdom. One found peace and rejoiced in Christ. One put on Christ in baptism. The church was strengthened.

Monday, the 23rd, Bro. Livingston and myself left the meeting to fill appointments across the mountain in Decalbe Co. After a hard ride, we reached a new and unfinished house in a dense forest, which, it seems, was gotten up with despatch for us as well as others, to preach in.

There seems to be some interest among the people to hear the new doctrine. Their preachers are kind to us, as I learn from Bro. F. R. Bankson, who has preached to them a few times. We were kindly entertained 24th. We had conditionally authorized an appointment at Sulphur Spring Church for this day. We supposed it to be the neighborhood that we had been invited to preach in about a year ago. On approaching the neighborhood I learned that the appointment had been made, but that there was opposition to our preaching in the house. Passing by several persons at a shop, Bro. Cordell told them the preachers were on hand, to which one of the company in an excited voice bawled out, "He will not preach in that house nor on the church grounds. If he wants to preach he can go over in ridges on David Spring's land, and preach in the woods." I simply replied, "All right," and passed on to the church. I found no one there, so I moved on with Bro. Cordell toward our evening appointment. We are now well advertised in that community, as we are throughout several counties in the Coosa River country, by the Church and Associational resolutions passed to bar us out of their unasked-for houses.

Bro. Livingston and myself have many calls to preach in that region which we cannot fill. May the Lord send them faithful men to give them the Word of life.

Bro. Cordell's amiable and intelligent family gave us a warm reception and a hearty welcome, which was really cheering. After rest and refreshment, we proceeded to Howard's Chapel where we had been invited by Eld. Hulsey, a Methodist brother, who had become deeply interested in our preaching about the soon coming of the blessed Savior. He is purifying himself by a godly life that none can gainsay. His loving wife is fully in sympathy with him.

After I had preached and Bro. Livingston had given us a stirring exhortation, Bro. Hulsey followed with a prayer that made us feel as we never felt before. It seemed almost as if Jesus was coming that very hour, and that Bro. H. was almost ready to embrace the blessed Savior.

25th. As Bro. Livingston was not well, and in view of his staying a few days longer than I could, I was requested to preach out my series of four discourses on prophecy and the soon coming kingdom, which I did, preaching three times in about nine hours. We hope some good was done. Two Methodists assisted in the meetings. I am told that prejudice was much softened. The people want us to preach to them occasionally. 26th. Set out for home, having a sore foot. I traveled about eight miles in great pain, and stopped with my kind brother, E. C. Maxwell. How pleasant to the weary to find a home in which to rest! 27th. After another hard walk of ten miles over a rough mountain way, I reached my own abode, and found that during my absence my son and one daughter had been sick some time, which made it necessary for my wife and two daughters to get up the wood, dig and house the potato crop, strip, cut, grind and boil out the Sorgham, and wait on the sick beside. I only wonder that no more of them were sick from such fatigue. These are some of the trials of a minister's life. They also bear heavy on his wife and dear ones; besides, there is much waste of the crop for want of an experienced person to look after those things. But, thank the Lord there is rest ahead,—a long unbroken rest.

I have been out on this trip thirty-seven days, among the poor, oppressed, afflicted. All our theme has been about the better future. I have not heard a R. R. train in the time. Have heard allusion to the presidential contest about three times. Have seen but one person who seemed to be enthusiastic about the election. I believe many will only find out the names of all the candidates when they go to the polls. Many will not care to attend the election.

28th and 29th. Preached at Liberty Hall, near home. Glad to see that the young converts rejoicing in Christ are keeping up the weekly prayer-meeting. Have had several good meetings. Brn. Cargile and Hayward came up the 30th, and we continued the meetings till Thursday night, Nov. 2nd. Had a refreshing season. Several professed to make a start for the kingdom. Two were baptized, one of them my youngest daughter, thirteen years old, and the last of my seven children to come into the church. Praise the Lord!

The brethren formed a church of fourteen members to bear reproach for Christ, seven of the young converts having petitioned for an organization. A few years ago, when this entire community seemed to be down on me so hard for a new doctrine, I could not have thought of ever reaching such a result; but, by the Lord's help, for which I have prayed, we have succeeded. Be all the glory to him. Amen.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Advent Christian Conference of Ohio met at Norwalk, Ohio, Oct. 27th, 1876. Convened at the call of the President. In absence of the President, Eld. Frank Burr was chosen Chairman pro. tem., and S. D. Welsh, of Bucyrus, O., as Secretary. Opened with prayer by Eld. E. McCullock, of Nevada.

The Conference then listened to an address by the Chairman relative to the object of the meeting, the transaction of its business, and preparation for the coming of the Lord.

The minutes of the last meeting of the Conference at Nevada, O., were read, followed by minor reports of various matters.

Representatives of churches were called to report.

P. Alling reported church at Norwalk. Number of members, 80; additions, 8; deaths, 1; discharges, none.

E. McCullock, Nevada church, reported 175 members on the roll; removals, 50; additions, 62; deaths, none. Pastor's heart full of joy on account of the good accomplished in his field of labor.

Sparta, Morrow Co., O., represented by J. Blynn, and M. B. Lyon. Organized during the past summer with a membership of 20, and Eld. McCullock as their pastor. The report from this church was of more than usual interest, it being hotly contested ground against the adversary.

North Fairfield church, represented by Eld. L. C. Kerr, pastor. Membership 21, active and hopeful. Some minor divisions, but all working together in a common cause to meet the enemies and opposers of God's truth, and trying to show the way to life. An interesting field of labor.

Bro. John Eshelman, from West Salem, came to represent the cause of Christ in that place. Related his experience at large, presenting to the Conference a description of whitened harvest fields, waiting for reapers.

Eld. D. T. Call reported by letter, as removed from the church at East Creek, and called to the pastorate of the church at Rockbridge, Hocking Co., Ohio. The Conference received his kind, christian letter, with much satisfaction.

Church at Edinboro, Pa., represented by Eld. G. W. Stetson. Reports forty-two additions. Sends a happy greeting, that as the Lord has so abundantly prospered them, so may sister churches be richly blessed.

S. M. Judson, a visiting brother, Presbyterian minister from Sylvania, O., lately converted to the belief of the Lord's coming being near at hand, was introduced to the Conference, and delivered a short, spirited, and truthful address on the subject of scattering the truth of Christ's second advent.

Special committees appointed: Business Committee, Elds. McCullock, Lyon, and Jefferson.

Preaching Committee: Brn. Alling, Blinn and Kerr.

Standing committees: Ministerial, Elds. Burr, Stetson, and McCullock.

Tent Committee: Three each from the churches of Norwalk, Fairfield, and Nevada.

Moved that the Chairman of each Committee form a final Committee for procuring a tent for field service. Brethren chosen: Jefferson, Humiston, and Treadwell, Norwalk; Peck, Harvey, and Kerr, Fairfield; Flaharty, Stewart, and Welsh, Nevada.

Ministerial Committee presented S. D. Welsh as a candidate for ordination.

Conference received a letter from Bro. C. Mendenhall, of Lexington, Mich., tendering his resignation as President of the Conference. Letter placed on file.

Delegates elected to the Eastern Advent Association: McCullock, Stetson, and Burr. For Western Advent Association: McCullock, Flaharty, McCullock, and Burr.

Officers for the ensuing year are: President, Eld. Frank Burr, Chicago, Ill.; Vice President, Eld. G. W. Stetson, Edinboro, Pa: Secretary, S. D. Welsh, Bucyrus, O.; Treasurer, E. McCullock, Nevada, O.

The Conference from the beginning was marked by a spirit of forbearance and christian love. No part of its work suffered by lack of ability of its members. The devotional exercises interspersed at their appropriate places, were conducted by Bro. Burr; sermon on Thursday evening by L. C. Kerr; Friday evening, by E. McCullock; Saturday, at 2 P. M., S. D. Welsh; Saturday evening, S. M. Judson; Sunday A. M., love feast; 11 A. M., F. Burr; Sunday evening, G. W. Stetson.

On Sunday afternoon, following the sermon, Bro. S. D. Welsh was set apart for for the ministry, by ordination. Eld. McCullock preached the ordination sermon, Eld. Burr offered prayer, and Eld. Stetson gave the charge. The solemn exercises were attended with the witness of the Holy Spirit.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper followed the sermon on Sunday morning.

Taking it all together, it was a rich feast of spiritual things. So may it be until the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, at his coming and kingdom. Yours in the hope,

S. D. WELSH, Sec.

A FUNERAL INCIDENT.

O. R. FASSETT.

An interesting little boy of seven years of age, being kicked by his father's horse, suddenly died. The parents were very deeply afflicted by the entrance of death so unexpectedly into their household. At the funeral, the preacher endeavored to comfort the parents and relatives of the child with the popular tradition. He said, "The child has gone to heaven. Jesus himself has taken the child to glory."

When, however, the father and mother came to take the last look of their child in the coffin, before its removal to the grave, nature determined the true object of its love and affection, and asserted its decision against a false theology. The bereaved mother, placing her hand upon the forehead of her dear boy before her, exclaimed in the language of David on the death of his child: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." 2nd Saml. 12: 23. Thus bereaved nature decided, after all that had been said by the preacher, and against the common tradition, that the dead child present, and not a fancied one absent, was the real mother's boy. And yet, strange as it may be, the mother at the same time believed the preacher when he said, "The child is not here; Jesus has come again from heaven, and taken him to himself."

If that be true, and was believed, is it not a marvel that this mother did not then and there turn away from the dead child and look upward to the skies, whither it was believed her boy had gone, instead of turning her eyes toward, and putting her hand on the dear dead boy in the coffin? The fact is, the bereaved mother could not disown her own dear child before her. Nature, in the hour of sorrow, is a wise discerner, and as discriminating a judge as was Solomon when he gave his renowned judgment. To which child will this afflicted mother go? To the imaginary one in heaven, or to the real one in the grave? She knows where neighbors and friends have laid her own dear boy; but where the preacher's fancied child is no one knows, not even he himself. This mother, no doubt, unless the Lord comes before she dies, will go where her child has gone, on whose cheek she has left the farewell kiss, and on whose forehead she laid her hand so tenderly in affection and said, "I shall go to him." She will go to the grave and rest with him until those who "sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Dan. 12: 3. This was David's expectation in his deep affliction, as he says:—"While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept, for I said, who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live? But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." 2 Saml. 12: 22, 23. It was to the dead child David expected to go. A reference from this Scripture directs us to Job 7: 9, 10, which declares that "he that goeth down to the grave shall return no more to his house. The patriarch Jacob, when he supposed Joseph was "killed by an evil beast," in his bereavement said, "I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning." Gen. 37: 35. The Bible and bereaved nature agree against "the common tradition" that the dead are alive in heaven.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE MEETING.

I am requested to furnish for the World's Crisis a synopsis of the proceedings of the First Quarterly Meeting of the Advent Christian Quarterly Conference of Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia and North Carolina.

Suffice it to say there were present with the church at Liberty, Cherokee Co., Alabama, six ministers, and a number of brethren. They elected Elders S. R. Hood, President, W. W. Livingston, Vice President, and J. J. Smith, Secretary. We had some good reports of the progress of truth, with some stirring speeches from Elders Hood, Cargile, Livingston, Bankson and Smith. There was much to strengthen and encourage in their reports. From them we learn that God is blessing his truth as proclaimed extensively in Alabama, and elsewhere. There is a strong organized opposition to the spread of the truths we preach, and church resolutions are enacted to keep their doors closed against us, but this only serves to advertise us, and further promote the cause we love.

The meeting was continued three days after the business was finished. We had preaching, mostly by Brn. Cargile, and S. B. Hayward, late of Mass. The fruit was seen in many happy testimonies for Jesus, many penitential tears, one conversion, and one baptism. Thank the Lord! The next meeting is appointed to be held with Shiloh Church, Decalb Co., Alabama, on Friday before the second Sunday in Jan.

J. J. SMITH, Secretary.

ADDRESS OF THE OFFICERS.

President: S. R. Hood, Oak Hill, Etowah Co., Ala.
Vice President: W. W. Livingston, Gaylesville, Cherokee Co., Ala.
Secretary: J. J. Smith, Long Island, Jackson Co., Ala.

A NEW REMEDY.—Once, at Watton, Rowland Hill was preaching in the afternoon, the only time when it seemed possible to be drowsy under him. He saw some who were sleeping and paused, saying: "I have heard that the miller can go to sleep while the mill is going, but if it stops it awakens him. Now I'll try this method," and so sat down, and soon the pastor saw an aroused audience.

LIVE not so much upon the ordinances of God as upon the God of ordinances.

TIDINGS.

H. PRATT.

Tidings, news or information may be joyful or sad; may bring peace or trouble; resignation, or irritation and madness. When Belshazzar was told that the mysterious writing on the wall of the king's palace, announced the end of his reign, he seemed resigned, and bestowed the promised reward upon Daniel. Not so with Ahab. When he was warned of his fate at Ramath Gilead, he hurled the prophet into prison till he should return in peace. Gabriel said to the shepherds, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy." But the "tidings, out of the east and out of the north," that are to salute the ears of that helpless king—Dan. 11: 4,—will trouble him.

That note from Russia to the Powers of Europe, saying, "That in the interests of humanity she feels bound to march troops into Bulgaria and Armenia," touches "the quick;" and instead of resignation of the false prophet to his fate, "he shall go forth with great fury, utterly to make away many." Hitherto those Bashi Bazouks have been restrained and sent home; but now their fury will be unrestrained, and their bloodthirsty and licentious desires, will be satiat ed. Bulgaria lies north, and Armenia directly east of Constantinople. And the Russian soldiers pouring into the great slaughter-yard of the former, and through the mountains of Caucassia and the beautiful fields of Georgia to the latter, fills up that long looked for prophecy, "Tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him." The "great fury" which will now characterize the Turks will overshadow all their atrocities in the past. But none to help him. The "N. Y. Witness" Editorially says, "England will hardly attempt to cope with Russia alone. Everything considered, it does not appear likely that England will obstruct the encroachments of Russia by force of arms.

The popular indignation over the Bulgarian atrocities, and the clamorous demands for the extinction of Turkey, will tend to secure for Russia the non interference, if not the sympathy, of not only Europe generally, but the major part of the English themselves. The question now is, shall Russia be allowed to make an easy conquest, not only of Turkey in Europe, but Turkey in Asia? And if not, who or what is to hinder her?

What a chapter of probabilities and possibilities lies before Europe! "A time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation even to that same time." Then deliverance will come to all whose names are "written in the book." "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake!"

TRIP TO THE "CENTENNIAL."

C. B. DARROWS.

On entering the east end of the main building, the first thing, of any importance, that attracted my attention, was a large glass case in the department of the American Bible Society, containing the open Bible printed in two hundred different languages. Here I saw a copy of the first Bible printed in the English language, by Wm. Tyndale, for which he suffered martyrdom; also a copy of the first Bible printed in America, and John Milton's old Bible together with an old copy of the book of Esther on parchment.

Some of the Bibles in this department contained two different languages on opposite pages; for instance, on the left hand page would be the English, and on the opposite the Arabic; another with German on one side and Hebrew on the other. Here, also, I saw a copy of the celebrated Genevan Version published in 1580, and the Judaeo Persic Bible; the language of which is similar to the old Hebrew language. Down in the British department I saw a copy of the old "Biblia Hexaglotta," a great work in its day. Each page is ruled in three columns, and the left hand page, in the first column, contains the Hebrew language, the second contains the Greek, the third Latin. On the right hand page, first English, second German, third French. In the New Testament the Syriac language takes the place of the Hebrew. I spent one half day examining the old copies of the Bible manuscripts, etc. I looked long and inquired much for a copy of the old Septuagint, which is said to be the first translation of the Hebrew into the Greek, made by seventy learned men more than 270 years before Christ, under the direction of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt. In the New England log cabin I also found some more curious books: "Willard's Body of Divinity" 263 years old, and an old book entitled "Controversy upon the Catechism," published in 1614.

On our way to the Centennial we made a flying visit to New York City, and spent the Sabbath in Brooklyn. In the morning I took a trip down to the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's church. This church, inside, resembles in shape very much our western opera houses. It is very nicely arranged however, with a seating capacity of nearly 4000 people. Mr. Talmage is a fine fluent speaker; rather tall, sandy complexion, with side whiskers, a little bald but not gray. He spoke from the text—"The statutes of the Lord are right," and made some very fine illustrations.

After services I found my way back to the Clinton Hotel, where, to my great surprise, I found the pleasant landlord, Bro. Geo. W. Libby, to be one of our "kind of folks." And you may be sure I felt almost as much like rejoicing as David and Jonathan did when they met. From this kind brother I learned that Sr. L. M. Stoddard spoke at the chapel on Bridge St., and would be present at the afternoon prayer and conference meeting. So, in the afternoon I had the pleasure of meeting her for the first time, though I had frequently heard of her before. She is an intelligent and interesting sister. Though I did not have the pleasure of listening to her discourse, I judge from her appearance that she is an earnest and faithful sister in Israel.

After this Bro. Libby directed me to the residence of Elder George Storrs. For many years I have had a longing to see this venerable gentleman. One of the first things that called my attention away from the common orthodox theories of religion was the reading of his "six sermons," and I have ever since cherished a fond desire to see the author of them. I found him at his residence No. 72 Hicks St., looking very much as I anticipated. And here allow me to say, and I say it without flattery, he is the grandest specimen of an old man that I have seen for many years. He is very gray, but not bald, and there is that noble and benevolent feature in his looks that never betrays a good, kind, and honest heart. An hour rolled away, while in his presence and listening to his social and religious conversation, before I was aware of it. He was early in the Advent doctrine in this country.

COATS OF SKIN.

In Genesis 3: 21 we have an instance of God's care concerning our first parents, notwithstanding their sin. Though he corrects his disobedient children, and puts them under the marks of his displeasure, yet he does not disinherit them, but, like a tender father, provides the herb of the field for their food, and coats of skin for their clothing; thus the father provided for the returning prodigal (Luke 15: 22, 23.) If the Lord had been pleased to kill them, he would not have done this for them.

Observe 1. That clothes came with sin; we had no occasion for them, either for defence or decency, if sin had not made us naked, to our shame. Little reason, therefore, we have to be proud of our clothes, which are but the badges of our poverty and infamy.

2. That when God made clothes for our first parents, he made them warm and strong, but coarse and very plain; not robes of scarlet, but coats of skin. Their clothes were made, not of silk and satin, but plain skins, not trimmed nor embroidered, and with none of the ornaments which the daughters of Zion afterwards invented and prided themselves in. Let the poor that are meanly clad learn hence not to complain; having food and covering let them be content; they are as well done to as Adam and Eve were; and let the rich that are finely clad learn hence not to make the putting on of apparel their adorning (1 Pet. 3: 3, 5).

3. That God is to be acknowledged with thankfulness, not only in giving us food, but in giving us clothes also (Gen. 28: 20). The wool and the flax are his, as well as the corn and the wine (Hosea 2: 9).

4. Those coats of skin had a significancy. The beasts whose skins they wore must be slain, slain before their eyes, to show them what death is, and as it is (Eccl. 3: 18), that they themselves are beasts, mortal and dying. It is to be supposed that they were slain, not for food, but for sacrifice, to typify the great sacrifice, which in the latter end of the world should be offered once for all; that the first thing that died was a sacrifice, or Christ in a figure.

These sacrifices were divided between God and man, in token of reconciliation; the flesh was offered, the skins were given to man for clothing, signifying that Jesus Christ having offered himself to God a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savor, we are to clothe ourselves with his righteousness as with a garment, that the shame of our nakedness may not appear. Adam and Eve made for themselves aprons of fig leaves, a covering too narrow for them to wrap themselves in (Isa. 28: 20). Such are all the rags of our own righteousness. But God made them coats of skin, and large, and strong, and durable, and fit for them; such is the righteousness of Christ; therefore "put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ."—Matthew Henry.

OUR PROSPECTS.—The old Jerusalem was laid waste by war, and the ruins are overlaid with dust and desolation. But the New Jerusalem shall never crumble down. The jasper battlements shall stand and shine forever. The golden gates shall never lose their luster, nor rust upon their portals. The white robes shall never need cleansing, for they are washed in the blood of the Lamb. The harps of heaven shall always be in tune, and never be swept by dirges. No failing eyesight, no gray hairs, no weary limbs, no wrinkled brows, no hollow cheeks, no sickness, pain, nor any more death. Oh, blessed prospect! The full glory draweth nigh!—Guide to Holiness.

AN old disciple is rich in spiritual experiences. Oh, the experiences that he hath of the ways of God, the workings of God, the word of God, of the love of God! Oh, the pleasant stories that old christians can tell of the power of the word, the sweetness of the word, of the usefulness of the word, as a light to lead the soul, as a staff to support the soul, as a spirit to quicken the soul, as a cordial to strengthen and comfort the soul! Oh, the stories that he can tell you concerning the love of Christ, the blood of Christ, the offices of Christ, the righteousness of Christ, the graces of Christ, the influences of Christ.

IT is not truth that makes a man worthy, but the striving after truth. If God in his right hand held every truth, and in his left the one inward impulse after truth, and bade me choose, I would incline to the left hand, saying, "O, Father, give me that—pure truth for thee alone."—Lessing.

THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THANKSGIVING HYMN.

God of the year, with songs of praise
And hearts of love, we come to bless
Thy bounteous hand, for thou hast shed
Thy manna o'er our wilderness.

God of the seasons! thou hast blest
The land with sunlight and with showers,
And plenty o'er its bosom smiles,
To crown the sweet autumnal hours.

All praise to thee! our hearts expand
To view the blessings of thy hand,
And on the incense breath of love
Ascend to their bright home above.

THE BATTLE IS THE LORD'S.

A SERMON BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

When we look up at the stars they appear to be scattered about in glorious confusion, as if the Lord had taken them in both his hands, and sown them broadcast on the sky. But the astronomer understands that if we could reach a certain point we should perceive them to be revolving in regular orbits, and that where there seems to be disorder there is the most perfect order.

Thus the same things appear differently from different points of view; and now to-night this congregation, and the great world at large, are a confused mass of manhood, wandering, apparently, hither and thither; but from the angelic point of view things seem very different, and, according to their outlook, as they gaze upon us, they distinctly divide the whole of our race into two great groups, and they can see, I doubt not, from their starry sphere, that the whole earth is gathered together to battle, and that there are on the right hand those who are for God and for his truth, and yonder those who are for evil and for the powers of darkness.

If to-night there could happen that which occurs in the House of Commons, when, after a debate, they cry, "Divide, divide!" and some must go into one lobby, and some into another—if this houseful could be divided to-night, infallibly, I wonder where each man among us would be. Certainly, we should either have to be with the army of the living God, or else with those who are against him.

The neutral's place is absolutely impossible. Many attempt it. The labor of their life is, if possible, to be neither for nor against, neither christian nor ungodly, neither believer nor unbeliever; but it shall never be till light has married darkness, and heaven has entered into a compact with hell—it shall never be that a man shall be able to stand between the two, and join hands with both.

Dear friend, thou art to-night on God's side, or else thou art his foe. I say this at the very commencement of my discourse tonight in order that if I should seem to say little to those that are against the Lord and his truth, I may leave them at least with this warning, and then throw my whole strength into the matter which concerns me—namely, the encouragement of those who are on God's side by this divine reflection, that "the battle is the Lord's."

Now there are always two ways of using a truth, and this truth that "the battle is the Lord's" may be used as a soporific if you want one, and you may say to yourself, "Well, it is the Lord's work; the Lord knoweth them that are his, and the Lord will save his own, and his own work will be accomplished in his own way, according to his own counsel;" you may say that, and go to bed if you like and sleep; and I have known some that have been foolish enough to do that.

It is according to the old saying, "This is a good rope, let me hang myself therewith." Many a man takes a grand truth and makes a horrible use of it, and it is a horrible use to make of this truth when a man says, "The battle is the Lord's, and therefore I may sit still." Not so spake the faithful David. "The battle is the Lord's," said he, and therefore with a sling and a stone he hasted to meet the foe, and rested not till he brought back his head.

There is another way to use the truth, and that is the one I have indicated, namely, as a stimulus to us to inspirit us to do our best. Brethren, emblazon it on your banners to-night. Lift up these words which are so full of glorious truth, and in the power of them be strong. You are warring for God and for his Christ, and "the battle is the Lord's. . . .

Next, the battle is the Lord's because all our fighting is, indeed, done in the strength of the Lord. We have never smitten a foe yet but what God nerved our arm to smite. If it be indeed a foe of God and God's battle, it has been God's strength in which we have been enabled to fight it. Oh! if we had ten times more strength of intellect, or eloquence, or of pecuniary means, we must not rely upon it; we are bound to take our strength from Him who alone can give it to us. No man goeth on this warfare at his own charges. The charges must be defrayed out of the infinite exchequer of the Eternal One; and if we draw our supplies from any commissariat but that which is divine, we shall surely be defeated; but if from God our strength is taken, if all our fresh springs are in him, then the battle is his, and victory is sure.

That the battle is the Lord's is proved to us again by the fact that it is He that has bidden us fight and believe in a call to the ministry. Certainly I dare not stand among you to speak, my brethren, unless I felt I had been called thereunto, and I trust that you also believe in this. Not but what every christian man has something to do in the work of the Lord, and has a call to do it too; but we have a special voice speaking in us, bidding us testify all the words of this life.

Now, if the Lord has bidden us declare his gospel, in God's name let us do it; and if He has told us to keep back no part of it, but to speak it out, let us do it. If you never did receive a commission from on high, retreat, get away from the fight if you will; but if, indeed, the Lord has called you to this, woe unto you if you preach not the gospel; woe unto you if you start back in the day of conflict. It is the Lord's fight, because the Lord has commissioned his servants, rallied his troops, and bidden them advance on the foe.

But, again, the battle is the Lord's because he has pledged his Son that the battle shall be won. Oh! brethren, we draw our inspiration for every conflict against error and against sin from the wounds of Christ. As we stand and see what He did in order that sin might be dethroned and the head of the dragon might be broken, we feel that we have new strength, for it cannot be that we should be defeated if our Commander himself has laid down his life in order that we may conquer; it cannot be that the bleeding, dying Son of God should be unrewarded.

Unrewarded, however, he must be, if evil is always to have the pre-eminence. If sin is always to reign, then Christ hath died in vain; but the streaming blood of Calvary seals the death of every thing that must die; everything that is evil must die. Everything that is unlovely must die. God must and will remove from off the face of the earth everything that stands against love, and truth, and holiness, and right. There is a covenant ordered in all things, and sure, in which a reward is guaranteed to Christ. "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied; He shall divide the spoil with the strong."

There can be no question about it; whatever we doubt, we never doubt when we think of Jesus Christ dead, buried, risen, and gone into the glory. This is the pledge to us that God is coming into this battle, because his only begotten Son has come into it, and has bled and died to win the victory. Pledge after pledge has God given that he will stand by the side of his people; pledge after pledge has He given that the victory shall be unto the Lord and unto his truth; and therefore let us rest with perfect confidence. God's honor is now concerned in it, and when you once get God's honor in it, you know you may feel perfectly safe.

It is a grand thing when a man is able to feel, "Now I have put the very honor of God at stake in this matter. If this be not God's truth, I will ask him to let it fail; but if it be his truth, I have declared it to be so, and set my confidence in him, and if I can be ashamed of my hope, then so must it be, but God's honor will be stained as well as my hope." Oh, brethren, this is a thing that Luther often did, and I pray that we may have Luther's spirit, so that we may say with Moses, "What wilt thou do for thy great name?" The Egyptians will hear of it; what wilt thou do for thy great name?" "The battle is the Lord's;" his name is involved, and he will surely win the day. Thus much for the great fact.

1. If it is the Lord's battle, then we make very light of all the opposition there can possibly be. If it is God's battle, he will win. He will take time, but he will win, sirs. There may be ten thousand enemies—that is nothing—ten thousand times ten thousand, and multiplying that ten thousand times over, it does not matter at all, our God is equal to any number of enemies.

I remember hearing my dear friend, Mr. Richter, of Hamburg, say, when he commenced to preach in Hamburg he was sent to prison several times. The burgomaster sent for him on one occasion, and said, "Do you see that little finger? As long as ever I can move that little finger I will keep you down, and I will stop you and keep you in prison." So Mr. Richter said, most respectfully, "I see that little finger, but, sir, I see also what you do not see." "What is that?" said the burgomaster. "I see a great arm, and as long as the arm of God can move, your little finger is not a thing I am afraid of."

So it is, brethren, the battle is the Lord's. Little finger or not, what signifies it? I like that expression of David's, when he asked Saul who this "uncircumcised Philistine was. Why, he was so many feet high, and was covered with so much armor, and had one to bear his shield. But David wanted to know who he was. Indeed, brethren, if we would but calculate sometimes coolly, and cast up the sum total of all the difficulties and oppositions fairly, and then just put on the other side, "But the Lord hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," Christ has said, "Lo, I am with you always," and then strike the balance, why the whole of the adversaries are gone, we despise them as though they were, for the Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge.

2. If "the battle is the Lord's," the next influence it has upon our mind is that we are not at all cowed under a sense of our own weakness. You, perhaps, dear brethren, have often had a sense of weakness, a terrible one. You felt almost afraid to go into the pulpit, and when you have thought of the mass of iniquity, idolatry, and superstition that there is in the world, you have said, "What do these feeble Jews?" Here, in this conference, we look a great number, but, dear brethren, we are as a drop in the bucket. And then when we get up some society or annuity fund, and money is hard to get, and we begin to see how very poor we are, we say, "Oh that we were richer! oh that we moved in a higher sphere of life!" and I do not know what we do not wish.

When you think, "We are so feeble," then, my brother, you are strong. Now is your time, when you are reduced to the lowest point, that you are in a condition in in which the Lord can use you. It is a gracious thing to be emptied right out of self. I have always noticed, whenever the Lord means to give me a great blessing, he takes me, overwhelms me, wipes me out like a dish, and puts me on the shelf, and afterwards he has got something to put in. I have learned that it is the right thing to have this sense of utter weakness. Say to yourselves, "I am very weak; I could hardly be weaker; but, Lord, if I were weaker, still I would trust thee. I trust thee with only one soul; but, Lord, if I had fifty souls, I would trust thee. I can trust thee with one congregation. If I had a thousand congregations, I would trust thee."

Oh, how I laughed once when I realized what it was to laugh in Abraham's spirit. When heavy in spirit, I had this text come to my soul with power, "My strength is sufficient for thee;" and, as I turned it over, it seemed to me, "It is not much I want after all, and it is all his boundless infinite power with which he made heaven and earth, and bears it up, and works out all the plans of his providence." It is as if we should say, "All the wheat grown in the world is sufficient for a sparrow."

Oh, weak child of God, let this weakness be comfortable to you. Be like the little chicks, when they cower down under the mother's wings, and hide themselves with her feathers. "He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust," and when you are lost in his feathers, then, then shall you trust in his wings. Oh, the sense of nothingness must not dismay us, but make us all the stronger; for "the battle is not ours, but the Lord's."

3. What next? Well, then, because the battle is the Lord's we throw ourselves into it. For our own country patriotism would stir us; but nothing like the love of God does. If the battle is the Lord's, do as David did, take thy sling and stone and run against the foe. If the battle is the Lord's, then let every man in Jerusalem's streets be ready to go out against the Philistines if need be, and much more every man of war that is trained for the fight. If the battle is the Lord's, enlist ye, young men! Never will ye enlist beneath so noble a banner. If the battle is the Lord's, let even the cripple go out, for who would be away from such a battle as this, when the battle is the Lord's? Oh, let us cast ourselves into it; not promise to do so, but really do it. Promises to do and and resolves to do are poor things.

I received in the town of Pisa, a bank-note for a penny, and I thought, "They must be very short of money;" and when people make promises to do, the promises do not count for much if the thing is not done; they must be very short, surely, of doing, when they have to fall back upon resolves. No, brethren, here is the fact, the battle is the Lord's. Let no man keep back; but let us rush against the foe with all our might.

4. "The battle is the Lord's." Then the next thing is, let us do it in the best style, because God's work should not be done slovenly. I like the act of David. He picked up a smooth stone. He would have as nice a stone as he could have, and he got the best weapon he possibly could, because that tall fellow was not to be reached without throwing something into the air. Moreover, David practiced with the sling. Oftentimes, when he was watching his sheep he had taken a small bird off the bough, and he knew exactly how to manage the weapon deftly. There was an adaptation of means to ends, I am quite sure; and if the battle is the Lord's, let us do our very best.

Be as wise as we can, and pick out the smooth stones, and go our own way to the work. David did not go Saul's way, but David's way, and that was the best way for David; and so let us do. Oh, that we had the same earnestness of his! Oh, that we entered naturally and really into the service of God, and went at it in our own way with all our heart! The Duke of Wellington once asked a question of a soldier, when a commission was being held about the stocks the soldiers wore round their necks, and other parts of their accoutrements. The Duke said,—"If you had to be in Waterloo again, my good man, what would you like for your dress?" And the soldier gave a commendable answer. He said,—"Sir, if I had to fight that battle again, I would soonest be there in my shirt sleeves." And there is a good deal in that. If we are to bring souls to Jesus Christ, depend upon it the more we get into our shirt sleeves the better, for we have, all of us, got a good deal about us that hinders us.

We have heard brethren say that when once they have shut the door of the pulpit, they have felt not at all as they did before. I have no doubt it is so. There comes over our souls a parsonification. You may smile at this, but so long as you remember it, you may smile again, if you will.

I think it is Washington Irving who talks about going a-fishing with a very fine rod, with a silk line, and most marvellous flies, but catching nothing at all; and a little ragged boy came down from the hills with a stick and a bent pin and a piece of cotton, and somehow, he seemed to catch the fish, and fill his basket. He did not know why, but there was a sort of affinity between him and the fish. They took to him, and he took them.

If we were only wise enough so that we could get an affinity between the people and ourselves, and shake off everything that fettered us, what a blessing there would be. I do ask, not only ministers here, but all of you who love the Lord Jesus Christ, get rid of everything that hinders you in fighting the Lord's battle. Get a natural, loving, earnest spirit, as if you meant it, and I am persuaded that, the battle being the Lord's, if we do it in that style, we shall surely see grand results.—Christian Herald.

PENCIL POINTS.

I. I. LESLIE.

Lot's wife. She wanted to be saved, but she loved Sodom—loved to live there, and clung to the things she had there. Lot probably owned the house they lived in, and no doubt his wife had taken considerable pride in having it furnished and ornamented to compare favorably with the other dwellings around them. Perhaps she had worked hard, with her husband, to have a nice, pleasant home in the great city of Sodom. She was doubtless pleased when Lot gave up being a shepherd, and moved from the country into the city. Or, if at the first she did not like the idea, she soon found a city life less humble, and more in harmony with her tastes. We don't read that she was like her husband, and righteous; nor that she opposed him in his faith and worship; but the sequel shows that she had less faith, and loved Sodom more than did Lot. Why she left the city with her husband and two daughters, may be a question. Yet we read that the angels told Lot to take his wife and two daughters and flee; and also that the angels laid hold of the hand of Lot's wife, and brought her, with the rest, out of the city. Whether she went against her will, or willingly; doubting, or fully believing the testimony of the angels, we do not know; but this we do know: she came out of the city, and far enough away to escape the destruction by fire, and yet perished after escaping it.

Like Lot's wife, it is hard for many to give up this world, though they almost see the flames leaping from the heavens to consume their treasures. At the risk of perishing themselves, they keep their hearts fixed upon their beautiful things laid up in Sodom, and will not turn away from the sight of them. Will they cease to love them when the flames shall actually reach them? Will not their hearts still turn to them with a regret when they are being consumed? How many now are forgetting Lot's wife.

Will-making. Hoarding through all your life; then at death willing to others what you yourself can no longer keep! Willing it away to be still hoarded up where God may not reach it, nor his cause be benefitted by it. Willing to men what belongs to God; keeping out of his hands all that you can, lest it be dispersed among the poor, and the saints of God. This your last will and testament—your last act in life! and believing, too, that you are going immediately into the presence of God! Doing nothing for him with all your wealth—nothing through all life—nothing at death—and yet hoping, expecting he will save you! Trusting him with nothing excepting your soul! How can you trust him with that? You must do this; you would not, if you could help it.

Learning. "Ever learning, but never able to come to a knowledge of the truth." For nearly six thousand years, this has been true of the world. Six thousand years for education, and a knowledge of the truth not yet obtained! Studying to find out God, and neglecting to seek his acquaintance! Trying to understand his works, without asking any instruction of him! Denying his authorship, and attempting to penetrate into nature to show that it was the work of chance! or that itself was God! This is the learning, the education of the world. Men boast of their attainments and progress in knowledge, and deny whence they came, and whither they are going—know not the Being who formed them, nor Him who holds them in his hand. They have searched the heavens, searched the earth; looked at things remote, into things minute; studied to find how and why these all are; conjectured, reasoned, contended, disputed, decided, disagreed, believed, doubted and—died. Thus the world have been learning, ever learning—educating themselves for ages. They would not have God for their teacher. His wisdom was not such as they wanted. A knowledge of the truth the world have never desired. God has not been "in all their thoughts;" nor is he today. But the world are wise in their own conceits; wise to-day, will be to-morrow; but one day they will find their wisdom folly, and wish they had been taught of God instead of themselves. "The world by wisdom knew not God."

To be inwardly crucified, is to cease entirely from the life of self, to abandon equally what we see, and what we possess, our power, our knowledge, and our affections; so that the soul in regard to any action originating in itself, is without life, without action, and without power; and receives its action, and its power from God alone.

UNIVERSAL BELIEF IN THE MILLENNIUM.

It is stated by Bishop Russel in his "Discourse on the Millennium," that "the tradition that the earth, as well as the moral and religious state of its inhabitants, were to undergo a great change at the end of six thousand years, has been detected in the writings of Pagans, Jews, and Christians. Because six days were employed by Almighty God in the creation of this globe, after which He rested on the seventh, and as with Him one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years are as one day, it was concluded by the Cabalists that the world was to continue only six thousand years, and that upon the completion of this period there would succeed a sabbath of corresponding length—a millennium of rest and peace, and of uninterrupted enjoyment.

It is not a little remarkable that a belief of this singular notion" (the bishop calls it) "has been traced in the Sibyline oracles, in the poems of Hesiod, in the work ascribed to Darius Hystaspes, the king of the Medes, and in the writings of Hermes, Trismegistus, the celebrated founder of Egyptian learning and science. Plato quotes from Orpheus the same mystical doctrine, thus handing down to more recent times the conviction of the earlier generations of the human race that the earth, which had been given to them for a habitation, was to continue in its present form during only six millennial ages, and was doomed in the seventh to be dissolved, or at least to be purified by fire, and thereby rendered fit for the residence of a more refined order of beings."

Again: "It is sufficient to have stated upon grounds which no competent judge will call in question, the opinion which prevailed long before the birth of Christ relative to a momentous change which was supposed to await the earth after the lapse of a determined period, not exceeding six thousand years. We find this expectation expressed by Chaldeans, Persians, Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans; by orators, by poets, and by philosophers; and the only difficulty we experience in this examination of records collected from the literature of ages and of nations, at once so remote and unconnected, is to account for so great a unanimity of sentiment, where we cannot discover any common source of information, nor any authority which so many different writers could consent to acknowledge in a conclusion of such extreme importance."—The Bible Echo.

HARMONY FROM PROPHETIC AND WORLDLY STANDPOINTS.

THOS. FITZSIMMONS.

It is one of the most remarkable things in the economy of God, that he makes people involuntary witnesses to his Word, whether they will or not, and though they think they have placed themselves out of his reach, he numbers them, and makes, them in season, instruments in his hands, to carry out his designs. We have been struck with this fact, in the large number of witnesses, now coming to the front in every part of the world, giving their involuntary testimony to the truth of the last day prophecies, in their published convictions, and proofs of a great crisis, and change being at hand, the continued enunciation of which claims more than passing notice.

Regarding a near great conflict in Europe, statesmen, politicians and the press now tell us that it is near and inevitable; Adventists have long proclaimed this—long before these new heralds raised their voices—from the inspired texts of the Word, and here is worldly wisdom sustaining, unknowingly, prophecy.

They also tell us that "the fate of Turkey in the near future is sealed." For fifty years past, Christians, from prophecy, have been declaring this thing. "Take up any standard work on the prophecies and see. Here again to-day, worldly wisdom is sustaining the Bible.

From the same source we learn that "Republican Democracy is leavening and undermining all the old monarchial governments of the world." Prophetic writers have long asserted that this would be the case in the end, from the iron clay toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, at its downfall, that symbolized kingly power mixed with the will of the people. Harmony again from the two standpoints.

The statesmen, politicians and press, also assert that "The Papacy will play an important part in the final struggle." Is this new to Adventists? There is scarcely a prophetic writer who has not from the beast of Daniel and Revelation, with ten heads and crowns—signifying the Latin Empire and carrying the harlot—Papacy—a joint political and papal confederacy in the last times, given this same view.

Again, these same worldly witnesses state that "Everywhere the horizon seems gloomy, and affords but little encouragement in the future for hope or safety." Every christian reader of the Bible knows that in the latter days "perilous times will come," etc. Texts an infinitude. Hundreds of pious men and divines predicted fifty years ago just what we are passing through to-day.

Scientists tell us that the past few years have witnessed the most extraordinary changes and phenomena in the heavens and planetary bodies ever in modern times known. See the texts, "And there shall be signs in the heavens"—"And the powers of heaven shall be shaken." These same Scientists assert as their conviction, from these new and grave derangements of the electrical and magnetic laws of the solar system, that the earth, as one of the principal planets, may undergo at no distant day, partial annihilation or be swept to its verge by increasing proximity of the sun, or the internal pressure of volcanic fires. The Bible declares the end shall be by fire, and science comes to the aid of Revelation.

And so we could go on, showing that the world is just awakening to its situation, and proclaiming through its learned men to-day, what the Bible teaches, and christian writers have been proclaiming therefrom for 1800 years. Thus, as we asserted at the beginning of this article, God is now compelling statesmen, politicians, and the worldly wise to come forward and bear testimony to his word, whether they will or not. Their testimony from their worldly observation sustains his prophecies, and show that the time of his coming is near. We say let any intelligent man read the opinions and predictions of the celebrated men of the day, who have the past five years appeared in the public journals of Europe and America, and been enunciated in cabinets and public meetings, before tens of thousands, on the vital questions of the hour, and the forecasting of the future, and then open the Bible, and read, and see if they will not be struck with the remarkable corroboration and harmony between them; and then remember that these statesmen, politicians and writers have never, perhaps, studied one of its prophetic chapters in their lives; and then ask themselves how they got at a knowledge of these things? How convincing should this harmony and testimony be to our minds, when we see the Lord forcing in testimony from every side, to show to his church his coming, and in the rapid fulfilment of every last day fact, of his being near.

THANKSGIVING—HOW SHALL WE OBSERVE IT?

J. H. LUTTENTON.

"Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work."—TITUS 3: 1.

During my acquaintance with the Adventists I have noticed with regret that they generally disregard the day set apart by the Chief Magistrate of this country as a day of thanksgiving, by uniting to devote that day to the expression of their thanks to almighty God. This utter disregard of the day annually set apart for this purpose by the Chief Executive of this country, I consider all wrong. The apostles have plainly taught us, not only to fear God, but to obey magistrates, to honor the king, to be subject unto the higher powers or the existing governments of this world, for there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained or appointed by God; and kings, queens, emperors and presidents are the ministers of God to us for good. 1 Pet. 2: 17: Titus 3: 1; Rom. 13: 1–7. But when human commands are antagonistic with God's revealed will, we should obey God rather than man.

The text at the head of this article says, "Put them in mind to be ready to every good work." Is not the service of thanksgiving a good work? David says, "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant, and praise is comely." Psalms 92: 1; 147: 1. We ought always, and by every legitimate means, to seek to honor our Creator; and as an incentive for the cultivation of this grace, and as a warning against the neglect of its exercise, God says, "Them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." 1 Sam. 2: 30. We can the most effectually cause the honor that belongs to God to be paid unto him, by publicly rendering thanks unto him for the many blessings bestowed upon us. Jesus sought to honor God and make his name known and revered when, at the grave of Lazarus, he publicly said, "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always, but because of the people who stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me."

Adventists claim to be in advance of their Orthodox friends in interpreting aright the Scriptures; and this I believe, or I would not be associated with them. Now let us be in advance of them in another respect. We are known as materialists, or those who construe as much of the Scriptures as is possible in a literal sense. Our Orthodox friends often consolidate the several congregations worshiping in a village or city into one meeting. Now let us Adventists do just what President Grant recommends, viz., meet in our several places of worship, and not consolidate our congregations, and thus deprive the poor, the lame, the halt and blind of the opportunity of uniting with us in rendering thanks to God for the many material blessings which he showers upon us, and that our lot has been cast in a land where we can worship him according to the dictates of our own consciences.

The tendency of all bodies of believers, however pure, has been to retrograde. When Thanksgiving day was first observed in this country, it was not a day of feasting, but of thanksgiving. Neither is it now a day of feasting; and the writer believes that our Creator would not be displeased if his children should freely eat and enjoy those things which he hath so freely given them. But let us remember that we are living in perilous times, when men are unthankful.

The christian is in danger of being contaminated by and carried away with the ungrateful spirit of the age. We sojourn in a country where religious toleration is practically unlimited, and there is no part of our worship of which the civil power has ought to say, save this of thanksgiving. This custom of having a Thanksgiving day near the close of each year, originated with the Pilgrim Fathers when their first harvests were gathered in, and has grown by degrees to be a national one. And now, the President of this nation of over forty millions of people, by proclamation, annually calls upon christians to assemble in the places in which they are in the habit of worshiping, and there render thanks to the Giver of all good. The President simply recommends that we meet for this purpose, and does not imperatively command us to do so. Here his duty ceases. It now remains for us to obey this magistrate. Are we ready for the good work?

"MARAN-ATHA"—THE LORD COMES.

A. W. SIBLEY.

The second coming of Christ to this world is one of the central and fundamental truths of divine revelation. There is no truth more plainly taught, or that there are more beauties clustering around, or that is clothed with a greater degree of moral grandeur in all the teachings of the Bible, than the second coming of Christ. It has engaged the attention of patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and the good in every age. And as it ever has been, so will it ever be, so long as time lingers, a truth from whence comes the sweetest thoughts and most blessed contemplations; for at that time comes the reward—immortality and eternal life, and the kingdom "prepared from the foundation of the world."

This will be the grand era of eternal victory—deliverance forever, triumphs unending, an eternal perpetuity of life associated with immortality—a life disconnected from pain, sorrow, and anguish of heart, and the things of time and sense, but surrounded with the glory of God during the cycles of untold ages. O, happy day, quickly come! that sorrows may cease, and groaning creation be delivered from its bondage of corruption, and smile once more in Eden beauty, clad with its verdure of unfading green, no more to be blasted by summer's heat, neither by the frosts and snows of winter, but like him of whom it is said "the same yesterday, to-day and forever" to endure throughout the ceaseless ages of the world to come!

Language is inadequate to describe the glories and blessedness of that state, in which the righteous are to dwell forever.

Various views have been and are entertained, respecting the manner in which Christ will make his advent to this world. The Scriptures are very explicit and clear in their teachings, relative to this important subject. When the Master said to the anxious disciples with whom he was surrounded, "If I go away I will come again," no other idea entered their minds, but the coming of the same identical being that was then and there talking with them. No other coming of Christ the second time is referred to in the sacred Scriptures, save a personal coming. The term coming, when applied to a providential visitation, must always be used in a metaphorical sense; which sense can never denote the coming of Christ the second time to this globe.

Let it be observed, that the term descriptive of our Lord's coming the second time (parousia), always means bodily presence, and never means anything else. We will notice a few passages where this term occurs. "For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful, but his bodily presence [parousia] is weak." 2 Cor. 10: 10.

"Wherefore my beloved as ye have always obeyed not as in my presence only, [parousia] but much more in my absence work out your own salvation." Phil. 2: 12.

"What is our hope or crown of rejoicing? are not ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" (parousia). 1 Thess. 2: 19.

"I am glad of the coming [parousia] of Stephanus, Fortunatus and Achaicus." 1 Cor. 16: 17.

"Nevertheless God that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming [parousia] of Titus." 2 Cor. 7: 6.

"That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for my coming [parousia] to you again." Phil. 1: 26.

These texts fix the sense of this term so precisely, that there can be no doubt as to its proper meaning, and when it is so employed to denote the coming of Christ to this planet again, it must have this meaning and no other.

In Matt. 24: 3, when the disciples asked the question, "Tell us when these things shall be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming [parousia] and the end of the world," they must have meant the personal presence of Christ; and we have no intimation that they ever attached any other meaning to the term.

Dr. Wheedon, in his comments on the 24th chapter of Matthew, page 277, concerning the question which the disciples asked in the third verse, says, "Christ's coming was the second point of inquiry. There can be no doubt what it means in the question; and, therefore, no doubt what it means in the answer. They meant to ask when would be his literal bodily coming; and if our Lord did not play with words, he also meant by these words in his answer his second personal appearing, and nothing else.

And the word parousia, which the disciples used, never in the whole New Testament signifies anything else than bodily presence. And the destruction of Jerusalem is never implied by that term. Nor is Christ ever represented as coming at the destruction of Jerusalem. In every instance, therefore, when the coming of our Lord is spoken of in the discourse, whether in the noun or verb form, common sense plainly dictates that the meaning should be the same as its meaning in the question, namely, the personal coming of our Lord at his second advent."

Dr. Wheedon's remarks are candid, pertinent, truthful, and at the very point, as every candid mind must admit, when the subject has been carefully looked into.

AGENT.

A PROPHETIC ECHO.

The prophet next introduces again, in connection with the godless king, the kings of the "South" and "North," which we have proved to be the kingdoms of Egypt and Syria. He says, "At the time of the end [the time of the end is a period following the persecution, therefore all that takes place in the time of the end must be after 1780] shall the king of the south push at him [France], and the king of the north shall come against him [France] like a whirlwind." This passage, according to its terms and its divinely given location, demands that while Atheistical France is in existence, war shall exist between it and Egypt, and also Syria.

The king of the south is the government of any people holding dominion over the land of Egypt. The king of the north is also the government controling the territory of Greece, Thrace and Syria.

When God says in this passage the king of the north, using the same terms as used before (v. 6), in the same communication, it is a violation of language to say that the same scriptural kingdom is not expressed. If it had said a king of the north, it would not have been so explicit; but when he says the king, it must be the one under consideration previously introduced.

If an intelligent witness in court should speak of two men, calling the first a one-eyed man, and the second a one-armed man, and then speak of several other men, and close his testimony by relating other circumstances of the one-eyed man and the one-armed man, no court would have a right to rule that the last two men were not the same as the first two mentioned.

The present Turkish Empire exercises dominion over the territory of Macedon, Thrace and Syria, and is therefore the king of the north in this prophecy.

War did exist between Atheistical France and both Egypt and Turkey, as the 40th verse expresses. Egypt did make a very harmless and unsuccessful resistance as the word "push" expresses. The triumphant French army marched directly from the land of the pyramids into the Turkish dominions, passing through Palestine to the ancient territory of Syria, and immediately invested the city of St. Jean d'Acre, A. D., 1799, where it met a strong Turkish army and naval fleet. The prophet said, "The king of the north [Turkey] shall come against him [France] like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he [the king of the north] shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over." The words "overflow" and "pass over" certainly express victory, and not defeat.

The French army under Bonaparte was defeated by the Turkish army with the assistance of "many ships," a Turkish, Russian, and English fleet combined. Bonaparte sounded a retreat before the walls of St. Jean d'Acre for the first time in his life, hotly pursued by the Turks.

The prophet's eye still follows these representative armies, and he says, "He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon." The one who enters into the glorious land is the same as he who "overflows;" viz., Turkey.

The Turkish army did pursue the retreating French into Palestine, and did not attempt to harm Edom, Moab or Ammon, but only the army of the godless king. A most signal and perfect fulfilment.

The seer still continues the narrative, and says: "He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries; and the land of Egypt shall not escape." The actor in this verse is the same as he that overflowed and entered into the glorious land—Turkey.

It is a fact that the Turkish army, after pursuing the French through Palestine, did, after a contest of eighteen months, enter Egypt, driving out the French.

The prophet next presents an important feature of Turkey's operation in Egypt, after destroying the French, as follows: "But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps."

The Turkish government did at that time renew its demand, that Egypt should still pay an annual tribute to the Sultan, which has been exacted from A. D., 1517.

That Turkey is the government here predicted as having power over the gold, silver and precious things of Egypt, is evident from the fact that Egypt is now tributary to Turkey, and has been, with brief exceptions, for the last three hundred and fifty years.

THE GRAND CONSUMMATION.

The prophet's eye next falls upon this king's convulsive outbursts of bloody revenge, as he is goaded to acts of extermination by tidings from the north and east.

Dr. A. Clark, in commenting on this passage, says, "This part of the prophecy is allowed to be yet unfulfilled; what is portended the course of prophetic events will show." . . . "But if the Turkish power be understood as in the preceding verses, it may mean that the Persians on the east, and the Russians on the north, will, at some time, greatly embarass the Ottoman government." Bishop Newton takes the same position, and says of the source of the "tidings," "It is universally known that the Persians are seated to the east of the Ottoman dominions, and the Russians to the north."

It is a notable fact and one producing world-wide excitement, that the Ottoman government is now more severely embarrassed than it ever was before; and that this embarrassment has been caused principally by Russian agents and publications circulated among the sultan's subjects. It is also well known that Persia is now in alliance with Russia, and according to an order from the Czar, is holding an army in readiness to move in conjunction with Russia against the Turks.

All of this is in wonderful harmony with the facts announced by this sacred text, as interpreted by these and many other good and learned men. The movements of the king, produced by the foretold tidings, can be identified by their described nature and results. "He shall go forth with great fury, to destroy and utterly to make away many."

Newton, in his criticisms on this passage, says, "Whatever be the motive and occasion, the Turk shall go forth with great fury 'to destroy and utterly to make away many.' The original word, which we translate utterly to make many, signifies to anathematise, to consecrate, to devote to utter perdition; so that it strongly implies that this war should be made upon a religious account.

It is a fact, patent to everybody, that the antagonism involved in the "Eastern Question" is principally religious, produced by the irreconcilable difference between Mohammedans and Christians, and that the present war was produced entirely by that antagonism, so that it was "made upon a religious account."

The distinguishing features of the war, as predicted, are three. (1) Great fury. (2) Destruction. (3) Utterly make away many. First, it will be a war of great fury. The word fury signifies "extreme excitement,—over-mastering agitation, or enthusiasm." Webster.

In the application, therefore, we are instructed that the Turks will become extremely excited with over-mastering enthusiasm; that is, they will become so enraged against Christians, that officers, law, or fear of death will not be able to master or control their savage ferocity.

Second, It will be a war in which property will be wastefully and savagely destroyed, for the prophecy distinguishes between between destroying and making away many; one is the destruction of property, the other the extermination of people.

Third, That under the influence of this fury they will attempt to "utterly make away many," the word utterly meaning to exterminate; to leave none remaining. The war will therefore be distinguished by Mohammedan fury in an attempted wholesale butchery of Christians; all of the class—men, women and children.

All these prophetic specifications agree perfectly with the historic statements giving the characteristic features of the present war. The Turkish government is principally involved. J. C.

OUR WORK.

We wish to say to our friends that while the world is convulsed with the curse, and satanic inspirations are threatening war in every department of social life, sweeping us on with increasing rapidity to a final collapse of all earthly things, we feel under great obligations to Christ, his Church and all men, to do all that our mental and spiritual powers will enable us to do in publishing, in every possible way, the God-given message designed for the present time. We know that many are anxious to hear as well as read upon the great prophetic subjects now agitating the world, and we would be glad to accommodate all of our friends who invite us to preach to them; and hope that none will think that we disregard their desires when we feel compelled to decline their invitations.

Many manifest confidence in us, which we appreciate, by asking a great variety of questions (we mean those not directly connected with our work), some of which we could answer, and some we could not; but we have not the time or strength to devote to those subjects, therefore we hope to be excused.

We most devoutly believe that our time for gospel labor is very short, and we feel under infinite obligation to exert all our powers to the very best advantage, according to our wisdom, in the holy work to which God has called us. We earnestly solicit the prayers of all the pure in heart that God may assist us in this our great need. J. C.

THE CONFERENCE.

The European Conference meets to-day, Nov. 27th, at Constantinople, to make a final effort to establish the peace of Europe, and prevent a general war. A most perfect fulfilment of the angels holding the winds, Rev. 7: 1–2. If they make peace, then the angels still hold the winds; if they do not, then we are perfectly satisfied that a general war must follow, which we have no doubt will end in the "battle of God almighty." These days of suspense are of wonderful interest to us. God prepare us for the grand issue. J. C.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

The Russians have a large, well disciplined army, equipped with first-class war implements. For some years she has been taking great pains to obtain the latest improvements in death weapons, and all things connected with the war department. She has secured the services of some of the best American machinists and engineers, and has made remarkable progress in preparation for a great military campaign. She is well fitted to take the field against any of the great powers of Europe. The signs indicate that her time for action is at hand. Every movement now shows that she has decided to subdue Turkey and take Constantinople. England seems to be as firmly decided that Russia shall not have possession of the Turkish Capitol. If the conflict begins it must be a terrible one.

The regular Russian army has seven hundred and thirty thousand, but beside these there are reserves sufficient to make the number one million four hundred and sixty-three thousand. The army has also two thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight guns. The Russian navy has nearly three hundred vessels, mounting one thousand five hundred guns, of which twenty-nine are iron-clads, with one hundred and eighty-four guns. It takes about fifteen thousand men to man her navy. In Russia all are liable to be required to do military duty. This would increase the army to between two and three million of soldiers. The war clouds look very threatening. M. G.

BRIDGEPORT.

The meetings in Bridgport Sabbath, Oct. 22nd and 29th, and the the intervening evenings, were seasons of special interest. Several decided to be christians, and quite a number expressed a willingness to consecrate all to Christ, and received rich blessings. There was a continued increase of interest till the place was too small to hold the people who came. Two were baptized, and several others were almost persuaded to follow their example. One of those baptized was in his ninety-second year. He was so feeble that it needed two to assist him in walking from the carriage to the water, and when he came out, his son-in-law took him up in his arms and carried him to the carriage. The old man was much blest. When I visited him a few days before, and asked him of his spiritual condition, he said: "There is a load on my heart." He had been seeking to find Christ for some time without success. We bowed together in prayer. When requested to pray, the old man humbly asked the Lord to forgive and accept him, and was heard. When we rose from our knees I asked him if he was willing to obey the Lord from that time? He gave consent. Baptism was then proposed, and he decided at once to be buried with Christ. M. G.

A SAMPLE.

A special interest is being felt by many on the subject of the Lord's coming, who have thought but little about it till quite recently. The number of believers in this glorious doctrine is multiplying rapidly. The following is "a sample," just received.

"My whole aim is to please Jesus, and win his children to a life of entire consecration. I love the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and although a member of a Baptist church, yet I love many of the doctrines peculiar to your church. The Lord hasten that glorious day, and may we labor to make ready a people fit to meet him at his coming. It seems to me the end must be near. God already seems to be sifting out the tares from the wheat. He is separating a peculiar people to himself."

The writer of the foregoing is the publisher of a paper, in which the subject of holiness is made prominent. It has a large number of able contributors from several different denominations. The Spirit of the Lord is stirring up the hearts of his people to prepare for his coming. Let us do all in our power to persuade as many as possible to be ready for the coming of the Holy One. M. G.

PERSONAL.—Bro. C. Mendenhall has moved to Lexington, Mich., to assist Bro. George Wright in that field of labor.

Bro. Geo. A. Brown has closed his pastoral relationship with the church in Philadelphia and sailed to England.

Bro. F. H. Burbank has been very sick in Philadelphia, but is now recovering.

Bro. I. B. Potter is preaching for the church in Camden, N. J.

Bro. M. A. Potter has moved from Keene, N. H., to Worcester, Mass. M. G.

BRO. M. BATCHELOR.

It will be gratifying to the numerous readers of the Crisis to learn that Bro. M. Batchelor, New Bedford, Mass., has so far recovered his health as to be able to attend a meeting at the Advent Chapel, Kempton Street, last Lord's day. He has not been able to do so for nearly a year. It seemed good to hear him once more lisping forth the praises of God. Pray for him that he yet may be able to sound the cry, "Behold he cometh!" A. W. SIBLEY.

E. A. STOCKMAN.

Christ is enough. He touches us at every point. He covers the whole want of prostrate human nature and prostrate creation. His divine compassion opened a door of hope; his expiation made the heart of God accessible to believing men; his resurrection brought immortality to light. Taking upon himself our flesh and form, he became sensitive as the apple of an eye to all our infirmities without being tainted by our sins.

To the suffering of the cross he brought a divine meritoriousness that went down to the lowest plain of human guilt, and went up to the supremest hights of a justice as infinite and endless as God. The divinity of his nature and the virtue of his death cover man's whole necessity and Heaven's entire claim. No poor human heart is so low, dark, vile, despairing that Christ cannot reach and save it, by washing it in his own blood, and clothing it in his own righteousness. But all this is conditioned upon the sinner's hearty acceptance of him and entire surrender to him. The whole purpose and plan of redemption is poised on the elective decision of man. "He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

Christ is enough. His blood cleanseth from all unrighteousness, his grace masters every passion, his power succors in every assault and preserves in every possible emergency. He most tenderly, yet very mightily keeps his own in the darkest hour.

Christ is enough. All power is given to him. He commands the warring elements of nature, and they obey him. The storm-maddened sea grows calm under his feet. The shadows of death flee away at his presence; the helpless victims, entombed in silence and darkness, rise to life at his voice.

Christ is enough. He mastered Satan in the bitter struggle of the wilderness, and sent a host of demons howling away from a poor enthralled human heart.

Christ is enough. "He is before all things, and by him all things consist." "He is the way, the truth, and the life." In the hour of universal consternation now coming on all the world, when mens hearts are failing them for fear, when the adhesive forces of all human society are rapidly dissolving, when lurid war lifts its frightful form at every capital of the old world, and sends its chilling menace to every nation on the globe; in this hour of peril, apostacy and crime, Christ is enough. In him is peace, safety, rest. And in that still grander, more awful moment yet to come, earth's final hour, the great catastrophe, the universal wreck, Christ will be enough. He hath all power. He can handle the angry nations; he can conquer whole armies of fiends; he can strike through the heart of kings; he can destroy death and the devil; he can raise the dead, and from the chaos of this ruined world of ours bring forth a new creation beautiful as man's Eden-home at first. It will be a glorious world of righteousness and peace, wherein no voice of violence or breath of sin shall ever disturb, nor death-shade ever sadden, nor devil ever tempt; a kingdom and dominion wide as the heavens, with throne and sceptre, and princely, righteous, sovereign reign, unchallenged through the endless ages. Christ is enough. All hail, the coming Conqueror and King! Christ is enough.

IN THE VALLEY.

The valley of humiliation is a sweet place. It is also a safe place. The wild rush of the storm that sweeps the bleak mountain top harms not. There is sheltering shade and pasture rich. Quiet reigns there. Peace flows there. Smiling sunshine rests there. The uncondemned walk there. God loves them; he grants favor to the lowly. His goodness abounds, his loving kindness fails not. There would I lie whate'er betide.

The best of us have nothing to boast of. He brought us from our captivity to Satan and gave us our freedom. With all our piety we are only pardoned criminals. The blood of another alone saves us from wrath. Our helpless souls hang on Jesus. Life, love and joy flow from his lips. He remembers what men sometimes forget, viz., that we are dust. In all my best efforts I detect human frailty, I see imperfect action, I find too much of sin and self. Lowest of those that love Him; weakest of those who pray, yet as he bids me I come to thee O holy Lamb. He does not say nay; and I sing—

My mistakes his free grace will cover,
My sins he will wash away;
And the feet that shrink and falter,
Shall walk through the gates of day.

AN OFFER TO MORMONS.

Bro. Couch:—Knowing that many of the Crisis subscribers live in localities near Mormon settlements, I wish through them to make this offer: We will send free a copy of "Mormonism Examined" to all Mormons who will subscribe one year for the Bible Banner, (price $1.00), provided this offer shall be accepted before Jan. 1st, 1877, and the subscription be sent to Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis.

Let our friends at once present this offer to them, everywhere, and send subscriptions for them. We trust the book, and paper for a year, will enlighten them. They are certainly worth saving. Let the experiment be tried at once. WM. SHELDON.

WELL-BUILT CHRISTIANS.

A well-built Christian is harmonious in all his parts. No one trait shames another. He is not a jumble of inconsistencies—to-day devout, to-morrow frivolous; to-day liberal to one cause, and to-morrow niggardly toward another; to-day fluent in prayer, and to-morrow fluent in polite falsehoods. He does not keep the fourth commandment on Sunday, and break the eighth commandment on Monday. He does not shirk an honest debt to make a huge donation. He is not in favor of temperance for other folk, and of a glass of toddy for himself. He does not exhort or pray at each of the few meetings he attends, to make up arrearages for the more meetings which he neglects. He does not so consume his spiritual fuel during revival seasons, that he is cold as Nova Zembla during all the rest of the time; nor do his spiritual fervors outrun his well-ordered conversation.—Cuyler.

WHAT ground have we for believing that we are ready to make the greatest sacrifices, when we daily fail in offering the least.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of Two THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

COMFORTS OF PROPHECY.

H. PRATT.

Although prophecying brings conflicts, it also brings help. The Lord said to Jeremiah, when he ordained him as a prophetic messenger over the nations, "They shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee. Jer. 1: 19.

When Moses gave his prophetic charge to Joshua, saying, "Be strong and of good courage; for thou must go with this people unto the land which the Lord hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it," he assured him, that the Lord would go before him." He will be with thee, he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee; fear not, neither be dismayed." Deut. 31: 7, 8. They were soon to pass the Jordan. The time of great conflict was near. Jordan was to be crossed, and giants to be subdued. But that comforting assurance—"I will be with thee; I will bring thee into this land to possess it—lifted them above fear, and they marched forward. He refers them to the victories they had gained over Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, and assures them of equal triumphs over the Canaanites.

We are occupying a similar position. They were ensamples unto us, upon whom the ends of the world are come. We, like them, are nearing the Jordan. The "time of trouble" is near. Its influence, like that of an approaching storm, is felt, so that "men's hearts are failing them for fear;" but it cannot begin until the king, who shall have none to help him, comes to his end between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain.

Then comes "a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together." Isa. 13: 4. But right here comes the comfort. "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Deliverance from conflict, tears and rebuke. There will be no more lonely dwellings, desolated by death; for the sleepers "in the dust shall awake;" and Paul says, "Comfort one another with these words."

God's words of comfort do not stop here. "They that be wise shall shine!" The wise shall understand! Away then with the false theory that the unwise are getting ready for the marriage. "They that be wise shall shine as the firmament, the stars, and the sun in the kingdom of our Father." No wonder that he taught his disciples to pray "Thy kingdom come."

A QUERY.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Can a wicked man be used to produce conversion that is genuine, is a query with many. Not long ago a Methodist and a Congregationalist, both official members of their churches, had been discussing the above subject, and of course disagreed. They called on me for my opinion; and, as it was appreciated by them, it may be a benefit to some readers of the Crisis.

Question first: Can a man that told a lie be of any use in the church till he confesses he lied?

Second: Can an impure man, or one that is not holy, get sinners to come to a holy God?

Third; Do you think the converts that come out under Eld. —— are genuine?

Knowing one of them was a farmer I said, a good man sowed good seed in his field, and a wicked man gathered the wheat. Was it not wheat? This was a new idea to both, as but few men do the gathering who did the sowing; and Christ used the figures of farming to illustrate gathering in sinners. My idea, after a long experience in these matters, is that the seed is the Word of God, which is sown in all intelligent minds or hearts, but in various ways and times, and impresses the mind more or less, producing conviction from time to time, and convincing the sinner that he needs religion. This is the experience of all of us.

In such a state of mind, if a liar or an impure Elder starts a meeting, even if his power is mesmeric, the honest, convicted sinner feels his need of Christ, and God's Word is made effective. God blesses his Word, it being mixed with faith in the heart of the sinner that believes and acts. God has used various men and ways to produce conviction and cause the seed to sprout. If the seed is good, an unrighteous man may sow or reap, but it is God that giveth increase, or conviction.

By these remarks I would not encourage hypocrisy, or discard all as being spurious that are brought to yield by an unrighteous instrument. We could bring some Scripture and much experience to justify this position. Again, some of the best of men have been of but little use in the church or world. But few are providers while many are consumers in temporal things as well as spiritual. If devils are cast out, we will rejoice even if they do not follow us or what we think is right. Jesus said to Peter on this point, What is that to thee, follow thou me. We must let liars and hypocrites do their worst, and get their reward, and we do our work the best we can. This exposition had a good effect on both of them, and I trust has saved a church trial in one of their churches.

IS IT CONSISTENT?

I. C. WELLCOME.

Is there not much misdirected labor and misspent money by many believers in Christ's soon coming? So it appears to some. While many devote all their energies and means to publishing the glad tidings, to sustain meetings and ministers of the Word, others, who claim to be equally believing, attend other meetings generally, where the Advent message is ignored, and use what influence they have, and pay out their money to support ministers who reject the message.

Some of these will occasionally go to hear Advent preaching when very hungry for the Word, and when the faithful ministers of the message come to preach near them, and preach without pay, or for what little may be contributed by those who do what they can to support the truth. We wish such believers to consider how many of their class it would take to support an Advent minister.

They claim to think the message should be preached. They think the ministers are faulty if they stop to earn their family expenses. They think them worldly, and money-lovers, if they hint that the church should give enough to support them; while at the same time they readily help pay large salaries to the popular ministers, and pay pew rents also, without any complaint. Why is this? Is it not to gratify self, keep in the popular current, and shun the cross? So it appears.

Is it right to help swell salaries, already large, for men who do not preach the last day message, and then wish faithful men to preach it without being sustained? Such action is not only inconsistent, but a great neglect of the duty enjoined by Paul, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

If we are near the day of the Lord, and he has called out a class of "faithful and wise servants to give the household meat in due season," then it is the duty of all who believe it to do all they can to help publish it, and to sustain those who preach it.

QUARTERLY CONF. REPORT.

The Quarterly Conference in Middle District convened at Clinton, Mass., beginning Wednesday evening, Nov. 9th, and lasting over the following Sabbath.

When we arrived on the train Wednesday, we were greeted by the dear brethren and sisters whose hearts were filled with joy and expectation. We met Elders Hemenway and Simpson the first evening; and when the time arrived for our meeting, we listened to preaching from the President of the Mass. Conference, J. Hemenway, from Luke 15: 2. "This man receiveth sinners." The Elder presented some very stirring thoughts, showing how Jesus received sinners; presenting the "manner of love" that stirred the great heart of Christ to receive poor lost men.

Thursday morning was spent mostly in prayer for the outpouring of God's tender Spirit.

Thursday afternoon Elder Simpson preached to us from Heb. 10: 25, giving us the reasons why we should look for our long expected Lord, also why we should often meet and earnestly exhort one another. Thursday evening, the train brought Elder J. Couch, who gave his Bible thoughts on the Eastern Question.

Many from the other denominations came in and listened with much earnestness to the Word of God and the history of the nations. The preaching was very impressive.

Friday morning was spent in prayer and conference. The earnest prayers and exhortations showed that their joy was full, and that the church was confiding in their blessed Lord Jesus.

Friday afternoon preaching by Elder M. A. Potter, from Luke 9: 23. It was interesting to listen to the daily cross that must be taken up; the Elder's illustrations showing that good soldiers were those that stood trials and hard labor.

Friday evening preaching by J. Hemenway from Mark 10: 46–52. The sermon closed with an application to the blind world; exhorting them to call on the Son of David that they might see to follow Jesus, and keep out of dramatic performances, festivals, oyster suppers, and sociables, gotten up to please the Devil and lusts of man, and destroying the influence that the Christian religion should have upon the minds of men, and causing our young men to stumble over the professed church into perdition.

Saturday morning, we met for prayer, and the Lord poured out his melting spirit upon his children.

Saturday afternoon preaching by Bro. H. H. Nash from Gal. 6: 14. The principle point presented in the sermon was that we should not glory in ourselves. It was very impressive, and struck home to the heart. Following the sermon was one of the richest seasons among the children of God I ever witnessed.

Saturday evening, preaching by Elder M. A. Potter, from Heb. 2: 3. The entire sermon was an appeal to backsliders, those that were cold and lukewarm, and sinners. God was in the appeal, and an invitation being given, a number came to the front for prayers.

Sunday morning the children enjoyed a love-feast, after which there was preaching from Amos 3: 3. And in the afternoon from Matt. 21: 3, and in the evening from Rev. 6: 16, by the writer. After preaching in the evening, an invitation was given to sinners desiring to seek the Savior to come forward, and some came. The Lord not only blessed the church, but we trust saved some. We were glad to see the interest manifested on the part of Elders Couch, Hemenway, Simpson, Potter, Nash, Merriam, and Ruggles, for this church. May God bless them, and keep them by his mighty power, until our Lord Jesus Christ shall come in glory.

Palmer, Mass. H. H. TUCKER.

Correspondence.

From Sr. J. A. Goodrich.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—I am able, by the blessings of our Heavenly Father, to write a few cheering words to you. May God bless you, is the earnest desire of my heart. This morning, I was led to look up and rejoice. What a blessed privilege it is to rejoice. Isaiah says "Behold God is my salvation. I will trust and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song. He also is become my salvation.

Never did the papers come so laden with precious truths as in the few weeks that are past. May every one who takes the pen to write be inspired from on high. As you lift up the standard of the cross before the people, preach and write the blessed truths as you have never done before.

How glad I am for this glorious hope of Jesus' coming. I rejoice that I am one of that happy number who are looking and waiting for the return of our Lord. It is blessed to live here, even if we have to suffer. I never saw the time that my sufferings were so great that I could not look up and praise the Lord. He always stands by me in hours of distress. I often weep because he is so good to me. I wish I could tell you how good the Lord is and has ever been to me. He is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely; and I mean to serve him while I live, for his loving kindness to me. I have made up my mind that if the Lord will own me as one of his children, I will be willing to go through anything that he sees is for my good and his glory.

Oh! how glad I am that I live and have the privilege of writing to you again. You all seem dear to me, though many of you are strangers. I rejoice to know that we are one in Christ, and all of one family, and worship the same Jesus. I had the privilege of attending the Connecticut Camp-meeting, and it was cheering beyond all I can express. It seemed to me that I could hardly realize that I was able to meet with those of like precious faith in the tented grove to worship God. My heart went up in deep thankfulness to the Giver of all earthly blessings for giving me strength to meet with them. It is two years since I have been able to meet with the children in camp. I listened to the cheering testimonies of the dear children, and they seemed to me more sweet than ever before. I could look up and rejoice that I was worthy to be granted such a blessed privilege.

While I have been deprived of all those privileges, I have learned a great many lessons of trust in the Lord; and feel that it is good for me that I have been afflicted. I rejoice that I am worthy to be one of the chosen ones. And if I am called to suffer while I live, I will rejoice, knowing that if I suffer with him I shall also reign with him.

I thought I never listened to such sermons. I shall never forget them while I live. Oh! how sweet is this blessed hope. I love it, and it is as dear to me as my life. I am determined to see what lies at the end of the race, and have a home on the new earth. Will it not be glorious? When I think of what Jesus has promised to the faithful ones I am contented, and feel that it is no matter what I am called to pass through in this life. I shall enjoy a blessed rest in the sweet by and by. I have never had to call on God in vain. He tells us that he will be with us to bless and sanctify to us the deepest distress. Is not that enough? He that is for us is more than all they that are against us, and he will not withhold any good thing from those that walk uprightly. To the scattered saints I would say fight on. The battle will be short. Let us pray for each other. He who is our Life will soon appear, and we shall appear with him in glory.

From H. A. Linden.

Dear Editor:—When I read of the hardships and privations of the preachers and their families in the south and west, my eyes fill with tears of sorrow, and of joy. Of sorrow, because they suffer, and I am not able to send relief; and of joy, because there are men who feel that they must preach the Gospel of Christ, although it does not clothe them finely, nor feed them sumptuously.

But I am persuaded that the time is now very near, when all our labors and trials will be over forevermore. A conflict is begun among the nations, and they are perplexed and angry; and during the coming struggle and mighty clash of arms, Rome will not escape. Rome, the capital seat of "Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth." And when her capital is attacked it cannot fail to bring in the time of trouble spoken of by Daniel the Prophet; for then her people, who are established among all nations, Rev. 17: 15, will draw the sword, and blood will flow, and cities fall to that extent, that the merchants of the earth will weep and mourn because no man buyeth their merchandise any more.

Where then will be the true followers of Christ? The angel said to Daniel, "at that time thy people shall be delivered;" and according to Rev. 18: 20, they will be where they may rejoice over her. "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy Apostles and Prophets, for God hath avenged you on her." Again, we read in the 19th chap., "And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said Alleluia.

And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia.

O to be in that multitude! To see him who has helped me so many times, only because I asked him. To follow him who is called Faithful and True, on to victory. For the kings of the earth, and their armies have never been so completely routed, as they will be when the "King of kings, and Lord of lords encounters them with his armies, all equipped and mounted on white horses. Then the heart-rending cruelties of the Beast and the false Prophet will have to cease. For he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and the wrath of Almighty God. Who is on the side of the Lion of the tribe of Judah?

You had better sell what you have and give to the poor, and enlist quickly, for he will surely conquor, and the hour is at hand. Already we hear the threatenings. And now also the axe is laid at the root of the tree.

Mina, N. Y.

From Bro. I. Damman.

To all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, let me say that in my opinion our day of probation is almost out. We have only a short time longer to preach the Word of life to dying men, only a few more exhortations to give. Shall we give them in love and in earnest? Should we not speak freely our convictions in relation to the awful day that is coming? Shall we not call on the meek of the earth to seek meekness?

"Seek the Lord all ye meek which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Where does this text apply? Surely in this awful day of carelessness and slumbering and worldly mindedness. The wrath of God hovers over this vile world. God's ire is soon to be let loose upon every nation under heaven. Bro., do you believe it? Do you have a sense of it? Is it not your privilege to have it? It is coming. O! think and pray about it.

Have you got that interest that you need? Our eternal interest hangs on this point. Let all the watchmen awake. Enough is seen to prove without a doubt that this move in the Eastern world will bring the day of trouble spoken by Daniel. The day will come upon all that seek peace and safety, as a thief. O what a thought! God pity the people!

From Bro. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Couch:—Despite all accumulating hindrances, the cause of unpopular truth is making sure headway against the tide of fables. Men of mind are losing faith in popularized dogmas, and are daring to think for themselves.

Our work has not been in vain. Darkness is fleeing away. The gospel of the kingdom eclipses the philosophical gospel of the day. I might speak of numerous inroads upon the dark domain of fables, but I only mention the fact that the march of truth is onward, and tradition is giving way before it. Press the battle till the King appears.

Broadhead, Wis.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Dear Bro. Couch:—Let me inform the Brn. and Srs. through the Crisis, that I have sprained my ankle again, and shall not be able to fill engagements at present. I have only been able, for the last eight months, to do without staves six days. Remember me in your prayers. Letters are comforting in my confinement. I am still watching and waiting for Jesus. May we be all ready for that blest day.

Mt. Vernon, Nov. 18th.

WILL IT BE POPULAR?

There are two questions which seem to have a wide spread influence among all classes of men. They are, will it be popular, and will it pay? These are so much alike in many respects that practically they may be considered one and the same. It is alarming to what an extent such inquiries govern mankind in their religious operations. Perhaps there may be something in our political institutions which gives prominence and importance to such an inquiry. Where votes count, and numbers rule, the temptation to seek popularity is very great, and it is all the greater because it is that which is popular which pays. The desire for gain is a strong incentive to human action. Yet in the midst of all the tumult and selfishness incident to political life and aspirations, there have been found those who preferred to be right, rather than to succed. Deference to the opinions of others is a good element in human character, if not carried too far. But when it reaches a point at which men are governed by policy rather than principle, then it becomes unmanly and degrading. This is pre-eminently true in regard to our religious interests and enterprises. If a man join the church because he finds in it an opportunity for securing some temporal advantage, he is little else than a moral excrescence on the body, and will do no good for himself or others. Those who wait their opportunity to pronounce in favor of any doctrine or measure of reform, until all odium incident to its promulgation has passed away, will be its most useless advocates and feeble patrons.

Whoever asks "Have any of the rulers believed on him?" will prove a half-hearted and vascillating disciple. Those will be of most service who "count not their lives dear unto themselves," and who deem it all joy to be despised, and have their names "cast out as evil." Such persons will stand firm in the day of trial, and be the most bold and true in the season of adversity. They love the cause they adopt, more and more in proportion as it may be dishonored and compromised. When the glorious "flag of stars" was trampled in the dust by an infuriated mob in this city, to all the truly patriotic that symbol of liberty became more dear than ever. The identical banner, soiled and dishonored as it had been, aroused the deepest emotions in the hearts of the friends of free speech and human progress. O that the disciples of Christ, the advocates of holiness, may be as devoted and true! Whether popular or profitable, let all stand firm, and be bold in the name and strength of the Lord.—Chris. Standard.

The Michigan Christian Advocate calls attention to a recent change in the tactics of the Romish priests. It says: "Events have recently transpired in this city which sustain the position we have taken on this subject. Protestant teachers are set aside—teachers eminently qualified for their work—and their places supplied with Catholics. The proportion of Catholic teachers in the schools of Detroit is very large, and if any one suggests that this ought not to be, the cry of persecution is raised, and we are charged with sectarian aims. Because we attempt to guard against sectarianism, and the worst kind of sectarianism in our public system of education, sympathy is invited on the ground that they are denied their rights. The plot is, by various means to control the schools, for it is evident that no division of the funds can be secured,

Obituaries.

FROST. In Grafton, Mass., Oct. 30th, Sr. Ann C. Frost, aged fifty-two years.

Sr. Frost was the only surviving sister of Sr. E. G. Higgins, of Worcester. Sr. Frost trusted fully in Jesus, who sustained her wonderfully in her last sickness, and remained with her in a very loving manner during the closing hours of her life, making them peaceful and joyful. She is sweetly sleeping in him, to be awakened at his coming. She leaves two children and many dear friends to mourn her death. May they meet her in paradise. The funeral was at the chapel in Worcester, and attended by the writer.

MILES GRANT.

CHANDLER. In Hyde Park, Mass., Oct. 31st, 1876, H. W. Chandler, aged thirty years.

Bro. C. accepted Jesus as his Savior eight years ago, and was baptized by our hands at Alton Bay. His faith and hope sustained him triumphantly through a long and distressing sickness, and he died with the sweet assurance that his death sleep would be short, and his waking, to blissful immortality.

J. C.

SAMPLES. Fell asleep in Niosho Co., Kansas, of typhoid fever, Sept. 9th, 1876, Sr. Sophia Samples, aged seventeen years.

She was a consistent christian, beloved by all who knew her. Two years since she joined the Campbellite church; last spring she heard the glad sound of Jesus' soon coming and the resurrection, and she believed the glad news and was baptized. But her work was short. She leaves a father and mother, brother and sister, and many friends to mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Isa. 25: 8.

GEORGE PICKETT.

WHITE. In Exeter, N. H., Oct. 30th, 1876, of diphtheria, Helen Flora, daughter of Porter and Annie White, aged four years, eleven months.

Little Helen was a bright, active child, and fondly beloved by her friends. For some time she has made her home mostly with her grandparents, and had found a very large place in their affections; but cruel death has taken her away, and she now quietly sleeps that sleep which will only be disturbed by the coming of the great Life-giver. May the blessing of Heaven rest upon the parents and grandparents in this hour of deep affliction.

WM. C. STEWART.

RAY. In San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 27th, of typhoid fever, Frank Augustus, only son of William A. and Mary E. Ray, aged twelve years.

Bro. and Sr. Ray mourn not as those who have no hope. They expect to meet their dear child when victory comes through our Lord Jesus Christ. Frank was a loving child. None knew him but to praise. He now sleeps in Jesus. May the Lord comfort the hearts of the mourning friends. Services by the writer.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Nov. 23. Belgrade advices report the concentration there of large numbers of Russian troops, destined for the Servian army. The crisis seems to be approaching in Eastern affairs. It is said a detachment of Cossacks are on their way to Belgrade, which is said to be an advance guard of 30,000 men destined for Servia. The barracks are all being prepared for occupation, and the Servian troops are now quartered in private houses. A distinguished Russian civilian is to take entire charge of the Russian Adminstration in Belgrade, and will reside there during the campaign.

A dispatch from Riga reports that that port is very much obstructed by ice, but is not entirely closed. A despatch has been received by the Board of Trade of this city from Lord Loftus, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, stating that Russia has given official notice that the harbors of Odessa and Sebastopol, the mouths of the river Dnieper and Straits of Kertch are obstructed. Vessels are forbidden to approach in the night time, and must communicate with the guard-ship before entering in daylight. Entrance without the assistance of the guard-ship is absolutely prohibited.

Berlin, Nov. 23. The Marquis of Salisbury, who has been appointed special Ambassador to act with Sir Henry Elliott as English plenipotentiary at the coming conference, arrived here to-day en route to Constantinople. During an interview of the Marquis with Prince Bismarck, the latter declared the neutrality of Germany and promised its cordial support in any efforts for peace, but refused to back England in case of war. He saw no objection to the occupation of a portion of Turkey by Russia.

THE RECENT CYCLONE IN INDIA.—London, Nov. 20. A dispatch to the Times from Calcutta says that three large islands, namely, Hattiah, Sundop, and Dakhin Shahabazpore, and numerous smaller islands included in Backergurge, Nookbolly and Chittagong districts were entirely submerged by the storm wave of Oct. 31, as was also the mainland for five or six miles inland.

These islands are all situated in or near the estuary of the river Megna. The largest, Dakhin Shahabazpore, was 800 square miles in extent. It had a population of 240,000. Hattiah and Sundap together had about 100,000 population.

Up to eleven o'clock on the night of Oct. 31st, there were no signs of danger, but before midnight the wave swept over the country to a depth in many places of twenty feet, surprising people in their beds. Dense groves of cocoa nut and palm trees around the villages enabled many to save themselves by climbing among branches, and some took refuge on the roof of their houses, but the water burst houses asunder and swept them out to sea. Some were carried thus across the channel, ten miles to Chittagong district, but the vast majority were never heard of again.

The country is perfectly flat, and almost every one perished who failed to reach trees. There is scarcely a household in the islands and on the adjacent coast but that has lost many members. The cattle are all drowned, boats swept away, and the means of communication with other districts is destroyed.

There is much distress among the survivors, which the Government is relieving. The Government Gazette says that wherever the storm wave passed it is believed that not a third of the population survived. The islands have barely one-fourth their former inhabitants. The stench from putrifying bodies is insufferable, and a general outbreak of cholera is hourly expected.

AN ALLEGED PLOT IN POLAND.—London, Nov. 20. The Standard's dispatch from Berlin says the Russian police profess that they have discovered a plot in Poland, The Roman Catholic Bishop of Zytomiz, in the province of Volbynia, has been arrested and imprisoned at Moscow; several Polish curates have been thrown into prison at Warsaw. All dealers in arms are subjected to stringent regulations.

This is evidently another movement of the Catholics against Russia in favor of Turkey.—ED.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and endurance. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per one hundred, or 15 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are anxious, perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of the nations. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 30 cts. per dozen, by mail.

NOTICE.—The Lord will, there will be a Protracted Meeting at Dixville, P. Q., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and hold over Sunday, Dec. 10th. U. G. LADD.
JOHN MAGOON.

NOTICE.—I would say to all wishing my labors that I have removed to South Sandisfield, where I shall preach part of the time. My address, with that of E. W. Tefft, will hereafter be South Sandisfield, Mass. WARREN TEFFT.

NOTICE.—I would say to those churches who have requested me to preach for them, that I am now at liberty to do so, as the Lord may open the way. Address me at 61 Bellevue Avenue, Providence, R. I. A. W. SIBLEY.

NOTICE.—Sister McKinstry has been engaged to supply the church at Beebe Plain, P. Q., with preaching one half the time. The pulpit is occupied the remainder of the time by other denominations.

Attention All, Please!

I have a proposal to make. Who will help in this matter? Several important facts have come to my knowledge, which leads me to make the following offer. With gratitude to God I learn that the "History of the Second Advent Message" has been put into several college and seminary libraries, where the results are clearly manifest in awakening some of the "faculty" and students to investigate and become especially interested in the doctrine of Christ's coming and kindred truths. They express surprise that such an amount of mission work has been done in this form, and such men of known ability and piety engaged in it while they were ignorant of it. It has also fallen into the hands of several ministers of different churches, where the results are the same. I am convinced that much good can be done by awakening such men as stand in the front of society. I want to sacrifice some to help it along. It is now the special season to make gifts to friends for two months to come. The retail price of the History is $3.50. Postage is now 20 cts. on each. The actual cost of the book to me in publishing was $3.00 each. I now offer one hundred copies of it to be ordered before Jan. 1st, 1877, to any persons who will order to give to libraries of Institutions, or other public libraries, or who will keep them to lend to ministers and other readers, or who will give them to ministers, for $2.50 each, postpaid. No others should expect them at this price, a it is 70 cts. less than cost on each. Address all such orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES.

This is an ably conducted weekly paper, edited by Elder Frank Burr, and published under the auspices of the Western A. C. Publishing Society. It gives prominence to the personal coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of sinners, and the eternal salvation of saints on the renovated earth. It also insists on a holy life as essential to an admittance into the coming kingdom. $2.20 a year. Address Advent Christian Times, 91 South Green St., Chicago, Ill.

The World's Crisis and Adv. Chris. Times sent postpaid to subscribers who will take both, at the reduced rate of $4.00 per year in advance for both papers. Address World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Appointments.

☞ APPOINTMENTS MUST BE RECEIVED AS EARLY AS TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following RESOLUTION was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"RESOLVED, That no appointments be published in the CRISIS henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given."

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"RESOLVED, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass.

JUST RECEIVED FROM

KELLAWAY & CO.'S ENGLISH REPOSITORY.

FOR SALE AT THE OFFICE OF

"THE ADV. CHRIS. PUB. SOCIETY,"

144 HANOVER STREET.

Persons purchasing from the following list, help in so doing to sustain the English Repository.

BIBLICAL PSYCHOLOGY. Written by an English Lawyer now deceased. An almost incomparable book on the nature of Man and his state in death. Our Preachers should secure it. Only a small remnant left. Published at $5.25; reduced to $2 50; postage 16c.

EARNEST WORDS FOR HONEST SKEPTICS. By the author of "Bible Triumphant." If possible, it even excels that work. Very interesting. 75 cts.; postage 5c.

DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT. Fifth edition. By Rev. H. Constable, M. A., late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. A standard book. $1; postage 8c.

HADES, OR THE INTERMEDIATE STATE OF MAN. Second edition. 367 pages. Also a standard work. It contains vastly more than the first edition. $1 25; postage 7c.

RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS—the "all things spoken of by the Prophets who have been since the world began." Not restoration of the wicked. A capital book to read, or give away. A good supply is on hand for this purpose. 16 cts; postage 2c.

DISCUSSION ON THE STATE OF MAN IN DEATH. An interesting debate, with double propositions, and affirmations as well as negatives on both sides held between Bro. W. Kellaway and a Congregational minister. Useful to scatter. Good supply. Cloth 50 cts., postage 5c; paper cover 30 cts., postage 3c.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT; being a Reply to an Infidel Work entitled "144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible." Has sold long, is well known, and still much called for. Needs no recommendation. Cloth 70 cts., postage 4c; paper cover 50 cts., postage 3c.

REPORT OF LARGE CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY MEETING held in London May 15th, 1876. Only a few copies. 25 cts; postage 2c.

HELL ACCORDING TO SCRIPTURE. By S. F. Pells. With Notes by W. Kellaway. For thoughtful readers. A good supply. 10 cts; postage 1c.

HOPE OF LIFE ETERNAL. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts; postage 2c.

CATHOLIC APOSTOLIC CHURCH (Irvingism): Its Pretensions and Claims considered in connection with the facts of its history, and the teaching of the New Testament and early Christian Antiquity. Cloth limp, 65 cts.

REASONS why all Christians should read God's written Word in Greek. 25 cts.

SPUR AND ENCOURAGEMENT to the Study of the Greek of the New Testament. 18 cts.

CHRISTIANITY, and its Relation to Judaism. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts.

Tracts.

We have for some time been unable to supply orders for some of the following Tracts, which are so well suited for plentiful distribution; but have now a large quantity on hand. It will be seen too that there are many new ones in the list.

A VERY OLD SERMON, preached in England fifteen hundred years ago. It teaches that we go to Christ "after our resurrection." Old style of spelling. Three copies, postpaid, 10 cts.

THE NEW JERUSALEM: Poetry, a Criticism, and Scripture. By W. Kellaway. Envelope size. Enamelled wrapper. Six for 25 cts.

"THY KINGDOM COME!" or, the Kingdom of God not yet established on the Earth. By W. Kellaway. Same style as the foregoing. Six for 25 cts.

THE DEEP IMPORTANCE OF THE RE-STANDING from the Dead. By R. Ashcroft, Congregational Minister, England. Six copies for 40 cts.

CHAOS, KOSMOS, THE KINGDOM OF DARKNESS and the Kingdom of God. By E. White, M. A. Our Earth's history from beginning to end. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 5c.

WHO ART THOU THAT JUDGEST? A Letter addressed to one, but applicable to many. By Joseph Stratford, Minister of the Gospel. A Rebuke with Doctrine of such as are cruel in their treatment of Christians holding life in Jesus. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

SCRIPTURD DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 50 cts.

LIFE EVERLASTING. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 25 cts.

DIALOGUE between a Predestinarian and his Friend. A lot of valuable extracts. 12 copies for 25 cts.

LIFE AND DEATH. Extract from Archbishop Whateley's "Future Life." 20 copies for 25 cts.

THE PILGRIM'S WANTS.

I want that adornment divine
Thou only, my God, canst bestow;
I want in those beautiful garments to shine,
Which distinguish thy household below.

I want every moment to feel
That thy Spirit resides in my heart,
That His power is present to cleanse and to heal,
And newness of life to impart.

I want, O I want to attain
Some likeness, my Savior, to thee!
That longed for resemblance once more to regain,
Thy comeliness put upon me!

I want to be marked for thine own,
Thy seal on my forehead to wear;
To receive that "new name" on the mystic white stone
Which none but thyself can declare.

I want thine own hand to unbind
Each tie to terrestrial things,
Too tenderly cherished, too closely entwined,
Where my heart too tenaciously clings.

I want as a traveller to haste
Straight onward, nor pause in my way,
Nor forethought, nor anxious contrivance to waste
On the tent only pitched for a day.

I want—and this sums up my prayer—
To glorify thee till I die;
Then calmly yield up my soul to thy care,
And breathe out in faith my last sigh.

MAHOMET.---NO. 1.

The following is a Condensed History of Mahomet, sent us by Bro. H. Pratt.

The native inhabitants of Arabia were divided into two classes, one of which pursued a prosperous and settled system of agriculture and trade, and the other, far more numerous and distinctively national, inherited the free and roving habits of their great progenitor Ishmael—"the wild man whose hand is against every man and every mans hand against him." These "dwellers in tents" led an unsettled life, roaming from place to place wherever they could find pasture and water for their flocks and camels.

Each of these tribes was governed by a chief or Sheik. The latter was often engaged in feuds, and often acted as defenders, or plunderers of their more civilized brethren. Their religion was Sabean; a pure and simple belief derived, it is said, from Abraham and the patriarchs. It inculcated the worship of one God, a system of future retribution and the necessity of a pure and virtuous life in order to attain future happiness.

The Jewish, as well as the Christian religion found considerable footing among these native tribes. To those who held the ancient Sabean faith, the most sacred place of all Arabia was Mecca; within whose walls was the holy well zem, zem, at which Ishmael and his mother, Hager, drank when sent forth into the desert. Here was caaba, a temple which Ishmael is said to have built, assisted by his father Abraham. A sacred stone, said to have been brought by Gabriel from paradise, and inserted in the wall by the builders, receives the kisses of the faithful even to this day. From the remotest antiquity thousands of pilgrims flocked through the gates of Mecca to walk seven times around Caaba, to kiss the sacred stone of paradise and drink from the well zem zem. Here was the birth-place of Mahomet, A. D., 569, a descendant of the celebrated tribe Koreish. At the age of two years his father Abdallah died.

From his earliest years he evinced a reflecting, imaginative and highly precocious mind. When he was six years old his mother died, and he was adopted by his grandfather Abdal Motalleb. Two years later the grandfather died, and Abu Tabel, his son, became guardian of the sacred Caaba, and took the care of his little nephew, Mahomet.

At the age of twelve he went with his guardian to Syria. They pitched their tents near Jordan among the Nestorian christians. Mahomet became acquainted with a monk, Sergius, who became greatly interested by the intelligence of the youth, and his eager desire for religious information.

From this time he had great abhorrence of idolatry. Having learned the wonderful events of Syria and of the holy beings that had dwelt in its borders, he ever after spake with great reverence of the ancient and mysterious land. He became a commercial agent. This gave him the opportunity of visiting different countries and of learning more of human nature. He was distinguished for his personal beauty and agreeable manners. At the age of twenty-five he married Cadijah, a wealthy widow of Mecca, and was at once enrolled as an important person in his native land. His high character for truth and honesty procured for him still greater influence, and he was known by the name of Al Amin the faithful.

Religious musings from his youth had led him to learn much of the forms of faith from Waraka, his wife's cousin, who had been a Jew and a christian; and had translated portions of both Scriptures into Arabic. He became more keenly sensible to the evils of idolatry. His mind continually dwelt on some project for restoring what he considered the ancient and true religion. Engrossed with these subjects, he often went to a cavern on Mt. Hara, a few miles distant from Mecca, where he spent much time in meditation and prayer. He at length became subject to trances, and visions. All this was kept a secret until his fortieth year.

At this time, spending his holy month on his favorite Mount in fasting and prayer, he heard a voice calling him, and beheld such a light as caused him to faint away. On recovering, he beheld the angel Gabriel with the decrees of God written on silk, who saluted him as "the prophet of the most high." Trembling, and half assured of the authenticity of the sacred vision, he sought Cadijah, who confirmed his wavering faith, and expressed the fullest confidence in his sacred mission. His friend Waraka zealously concurred in this conviction, and Mahomet thus supported became an earnest convert to the reality of his divine calling.

For three years he gained but forty converts. In the fourth year he summoned the whole tribe to a hill near Mecca, and publicly unfolded his claim and his mission. Ali, his cousin, was called to be chief, or vizier. Mahomet now openly and earnestly proclaimed himself the "prophet of God, sent to extirpate idolatry and to restore the true religion." He fully admitted the divine mission of Moses and of Christ; yet claimed for himself a fuller and final authority destined to supersede all other. The Koran, which he delivered in chapters, purports to be direct from God. The name Islam—submission to God—was applied to this new religion, and forms the keynote to its tenets. The millions of his followers to-day, accept unqualifiedly the first article of his faith which reads, "There is no god but God, and Mahomet is the prophet of God." A belief in predestination, in the resurrection of the body, in the last judgment, and in a futurity of reward or punishment was also inculcated. He condemned all images representing the human form, and said "in the next world the makers would have to furnish them souls or be punished." Charity and justice were strongly enforced.

Persecution soon drove him into seclusion, and his children across the Red sea. He found shelter with a convert named Orkham on the hill Saffa. Here they sought his life. Omar, a youth of great strength, was chosen to kill him, but his own sister, a convert to the new faith, so prevailed upon him that he too espoused Mahomet's cause, publicly avowed his faith and defended the prophet. Being sorely pressed he fled to his Uncle Abu Taleb. Here he was protected for three years. At this time, his uncle and wife having died, he was assailed from every quarter. Taking advantage of the holy month in which all violence ceased, he repaired to Mecca, and in the temple Caaba instructed the people who came from all parts of the country, and many became subject to the faith. He sent a delegation to Medina, to instruct those who had been attracted by his preaching at Mecca. Many at Medina embraced the new faith; and seventy of the new converts repaired to Mecca, a distance of 270 miles, and at midnight, meeting on the hill without the town, invited the prophet to take up his abode in their city. He accepted on condition of abjuration of idolatry and implicit obedience to his commands.

Murderers were actually sent to his house, but Ali, his Vizier, accepting his position on the couch, the prophet was enabled to make his escape. Himself and Abu Beker, his faithful friend, concealed themselves three days in a cave at Mt. Thor. On the fourth day they fled on camels toward Medina; a chieftain and his troops overtook them, but was so affected by the eloquence of the prophet, that he left him to pursue his journey unmolested. The prophet reached Medina, and made a triumphant entry into the city. He was soon joined by his family and faithful adherents. This celebrated "Hegira," or flight of the prophet occurred in the year 622, and is the era from which all Moslem nations date their chronology; lacking but a few years of the 1260 found so often in prophecy, and measuring, perhaps in some instances, the duration of Mahomedan power.

PORTLAND, MAINE.

L. BOUTELL.

Saturday, Nov. 4th, returning from Worcester too late for any train that would arrive till after bedtime, I took the night boat for Portland. Had a still night and delightful passage; and early in the morning was at the wharf, and soon after light found my way to the home of Bro. S. Dyer, where I found a hearty welcome. At the time of meeting went to the hall and found a stirring social meeting in session; the spirit seemed to be doing its office work, and the brethren were alive to their best good.

It was blessed to see the blending of the two meetings into one. It has augmented their strength; and for aught I saw, they love one another with pure hearts fervently. This is as it should be. United we stand, and are strong in the strength of him that unites us. Then our prayers, efforts, influence and work will tell for Jesus, truth, and righteousness.

I had a good day with the church. They were in a state that made it easy to preach the good news of a soon coming Lord. The communion season was precious, showing forth the Lord's death till he come. Bro. Grant has been there recently, and awakened quite an interest in the Lord's coming by giving a number of lectures from his Big Chart. They assured me that nothing, for years, had so interested their people, specially the outsiders. They regretted that he could not have staid longer.

This is the time to be prompt in preaching the Lord's coming with the needful preparation. The signs must be given. Practical preaching, leaving this behind, will leave the church barren and weak. There is a famine in the land, and while many think they are eating food it only leaves them hungry. But there is corn in Egypt, and Joseph's brethren can have it by coming down; and some may find money in the sack's mouth. Oh, this heaven-originated message of the return of the Nobleman to welcome to the new administration immortal souls to live eternally! I should think all the loyal subjects of Christ's government would be ready to sound the joyful tidings, and tell of the glory to be revealed. The dead come to life, the earth turned back to be the saints abode. Bless the Lord! This is the cream of the gospel. The second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ soon to come. The church in Portland was cheered with the cry, Behold he cometh!

There are some old pilgrims down there that have not forgotten the true sound. "Blessed are they that know the joyful sound." This sound is indeed practical; it pays well as we go along, sweetens every emotion, and brings into that atmosphere where charity abounds, and has a drawing influence that cannot be resisted easily. Well, I had no idea of writing all this, but I set the pen going, and it would run off all this before I could well stop it. But I will close by saying I feel much encouraged, for wherever I go I find a quicker ear to hear, and a more tender heart to feel the importance of this sweet message, "Lo, he comes!"

LOVING HIS APPEARING.

My brethren, it is the blessed privilege of the child of God to look forward for the return of Christ.

Day by day the cry goes up, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will by done on earth, as it is in heaven." If you are a child of God, it is the predominating thought of your heart. You may have different views upon this question. You may not have made up your minds on every part of prophetical truth; but no man can be blind to the truth that the return of the Lord is the great hope of his church—that towards this glorious fact our minds are to be continually turned. In the thought of it is our highest joy. But, if we are leading a selfish, good-for-nothing life, do not tell me that we are looking for Christ. I do not believe any christian has hold of this truth who is not hard at work, whose zeal is not burning clearly to confess his Lord.

Do not tell me that any man longs for the coming of Christ who knows nothing of these things. St. Paul speaks of a crown of righteousness being promised to some. For whom is it laid up? It is laid up for "all those who love his appearing."—From Sermon by Rev. W. Hay Aiten, in London Christian Herald.

HOLINESS CONVOCATION.

The exercises of the Union Holiness Convocation at Grace Church, Worcester, which began last Tuesday, have increased in interest and numbers in attendance each day, there being a full house yesterday afternoon and evening.

Last evening a sermon was preached by Rev. Samuel J. Austin, of Warren, on the necessity of sanctifying ourselves, and being prepared for the last day. He took his text from 1 Thess. 3 : 13, "Stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."

Beloved Editor:—The above brief report is taken from the crowded columns of a political daily. You will be cheered to learn that amid the murderous strife of other nations, and the clamor of our own political contest, there is one place where the children of an Heavenly King may "crown him Lord of all." One upper room where the disciples of the Prince of Peace are immersed in the fruition of pentecostal endowment. That in our Jerusalem, just now, more than "an hundred and twenty disciples continued with one accord in prayer and supplication."

The saints are filled with the Holy Spirit. A sound from heaven fills the place where they are sitting. The multitudes are pricked in their hearts, and many of these wounded are crying, "what shall we do?"

The sermon by Bro. S. J. Austin, Congregationalist, on Friday, from 1st Thess. 3 : 13, was replete with present and most precious truth; such as, "The Lord himself is coming personally the second time to earth, not at death—but at harvest time, the end of the world. "The Lord is the Bridegroom, his people, living and dead, the Bride." "At the resurrection the Lamb is coming for his wife who hath made herself ready." "This is the good hope, the blessed hope, the hope that purifies, the hope of the church, the Scripture hope, and the great incentive to holy watching.

"For proof, hear the Master, Evangelists, and Apostles; Daniel, and the exiled John, who declares that the time is at hand."

Thus the glorious Second Advent message was poured into the listening ears of the great congregation, while hundreds of sanctified hearts responded, "Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Bro. Caldwell of this city, and many others hastened to endorse the sermon, and express thanks that the key-note had been struck; that this inspiring chord now vibrated, that the glorious old hope of the Lord's coming had now taken its place in a holiness convention. On Saturday the one faith, and one hope, the coming of the Lord and readiness to meet him, still inspired the hearts and testimony of the waiting virgins.

Bro. Edwin Davis preached from 1st John 3 : 3. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure." Because, as he said, "I can preach nothing else." The power of this hope, the coming of Christ, has never seemed so real until last night. I can think of nothing else. It is buried into my entire being."

Suffice to add that this earnest intelligent message of faith and cleansing, encouraged and strengthened those who covet to be ever with Jesus in purity, and burned the conscience, pricked the heart, and opened the eyes of many whom the god of this world hath blinded. So, "mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other." Laodicean Worcester has been the subject of effectual prayer, and untold blessing through the Holy Spirit is expected to result from the "Union Holiness Convocation." DR. BUXTON.

Worcester, Nov. 6th, 1876.

TENT AND CAMPMEETING REPORT.

I would say for the information of some who have taken stock in the new East Maine Mission Tent, that the tent has been pitched three times since it was shipped to us last June, first in Unity Village; but on account of the very busy time of year we only kept the tent there over one Sunday. Had we been able to have pitched the tent in some good locality soon after farmers got their planting done, we might have done better. But as the Maine Annual Conference was to be held at that time, we thereby missed of a good effort being made in June with the tent.

Next, the tent was pitched in China Village, head of the pond; a place where the speedy coming of Christ and kindred doctrines have never been preached. Brn. Sevey, Blaisdell and Warren, with others, came to help at the beginning, and remained to the close. Brn. Weeks, Partridge and Hall came as they could, so we had plenty of help. There were those in attendance who hardly ever go to meeting, and who seemed much interested to hear the searching truths presented from the Word of God in relation to the great plan of salvation.

The evidences of the speedy coming of Christ to raise the dead, restore the earth, judge the world, give eternal life to all who love his appearing and reign on David's throne, were faithfully proclaimed, and the people were attentive to hear, and wanted us to stay longer. Some of the brethren from the churches in the place came in and worked with us, and were blest. One Baptist brother opened his house and barn and bade us welcome, and assisted the last Sunday in asking a collection for our benefit. Also others showed us kindness, while we proclaimed the last judgment message to them. We took the tent down after having been there over eight days, hoping that the seed sown will bear fruit to the glory of God.

Next, the tent went to Pittsfield, to our annual campmeeting, where it rendered the best of service in sheltering the people from the cold and storm at that late season of the year. The meeting began Sept. 10th, and closed the 17th.

This was the tenth session of our Pittsfield Campmeeting. It has done service for God's cause here in Eastern Maine, where there has been so much distraction in the cause which this meeting has represented. The session this year was thought to be one of the best ever held. Sinners were converted, wanderers reclaimed, and saints quickened, and made to rejoice over sinners saved. To God be all the glory. A few have labored hard to keep this meeting free from embarassment financially, and to make it a power for good to the thousands who have attended it yearly. The record is on high, and the judgment will reveal the good done. Among the number of preachers present, which was larger than ever before, was Brn. A. Ross, Wm. Sheldon, and H. L. Hastings.

I regret to say that on account of the decision of a part of the Conference, and some others, to change the basis of raising money to defray the expenses of the meeting, some of our preaching brethren had to go away with nothing to pay their expenses, and others with less than has been our practice in the past. About $45.00 was raised in cash and pledges, as the beginning of a new Mission Fund to put the new Mission Tent into the gospel field as early in the coming season as we can. Also about $48.00 more in cash and pledges was raised to help pay a balance still due on the tent. We would be glad to have those who have taken a share or more and have not yet paid, send it to the writer as soon as convenient, that we may be able to pay the balance due soon. Direct to South Albion, Me.

A new Campmeeting Committee was chosen: Wm. Banton, A. M. Harris, Wm. Clark, Oscar Farnum, G. L. Mc.Kinney, M. W. Corliss, and O. S. French.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

H. B. SEVEY.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Since my last letter to our beloved Crisis, I have held meetings in several old places. My first was Augusta, with Bro. Weeks. Our meeting was small. I think it was partly owing to neglect of brethren to circulate the appointment. Our message is worthy of the greatest possible exertion on our part to get it before the people. I think this is a fault generally among us. The brethren are striving to hold on to the faith once delivered to the saints. It was good to see some advancement in the divine life. Bro. H. K. Choate has sold his Law Office; and we have reason to believe for a higher one, that of a servant for Christ.

Our next meeting was in Hallowell, Monday evening, at Temperance Hall. Here the brethren made an effort to circulate the appointment among outsiders, and we were much disappointed in seeing so many out, as the weather was unfavorable. Here we had a good meeting. They have only a few meetings and are anxious for protracted effort. Next meeting in Gardiner. Eld. Jesse Partridge got the Free Baptist house and did what he could to get the appointment out. The children here are somewhat discouraged by reason of trials, yet the Lord has some, we trust, who have not defiled their garments. At South Gardiner we found two families interested in the truth. They arranged for meetings in Union House, and as it was the regular meeting of the Freewill Baptists, we held the meeting together, and had a very good one. They need the plain Word of God preached, that they may see more clearly the blessed hope. Next meeting in Richmond Village. Had a good company to hear, considering other meetings which were held. Some like the truth yet in Richmond, and are looking for Jesus. We visited some families, and found them interested in the truth. In East Bowdoinham we stopped with Bro. and Sr. Dinsmore. They traveled with Union Tent last year. Of late he has taken a decided stand to hold meetings as the Lord may lead. Our meeting was in the Schoolhouse, which was filled. A blessed good spirit was in the meeting. Hope the Word will be received into good hearts, that it may bring forth fruit to the glory of God. It was good to meet with old friends in the truth who have borne the burden for years, and yet are full of courage.

Next meeting in Bath. Here we found two meetings. Sr. Anna Smith holds one in Town Hall, a very few brethren going with her. Our meeting was in the Chapel. We found brethren and sisters in good working condition. Some were looking for Jesus to come immediately and establish his kingdom on earth. Our next meeting was in Rockland. Here we saw fruits of the tent-meeting, which was held by Bro. I. C. Wellcome and Brn. Blaisdell. Some division has been brought in among them on trine immersion and non-resurrection of the wicked. We had a good meeting, and trust it was profitable. When brethren have the good Spirit, they can work in harmony, and differences of opinion will not bring envy and strife. Let every one bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, and all will be love. We need much long-suffering in this age. Oh! may we dear brethren and sisters, bear and forbear one with another, remembering our own weakness, lest Satan get the advantage of us and we lose the good Spirit that suffereth long and is kind.

Meetings commenced in Vinalhaven, Wednesday evening, holding afternoons and evenings through the week. Here I met with Eld. Kirkland, who came to hold meetings with the Y. M. C. A. We labored together, as our meeting was appointed at the same house. Our brethren and sisters have joined the Association and are doing a good work. We saw fruits of our tent-meeting. Our meetings were very good. Some started for the kingdom. Bro. Kirkland is a free man, and in harmony with us, except the unconscious state of the dead. He holds that saints will get their reward at Jesus' coming in the new earth. We have reason to praise the Lord that his truth finds honest hearts in these days of fables. We found a good people in Vinalhaven loving his coming and waiting for immortality.

Mt. Vernon, Me., Nov. 11th.

LET your motives be the love of God—your aim the glory of God—and the result for which you are in search, God's blessing and favor. Let it be your endeavor, as far as possible, to give to earth, in your society your pursuits, your affections, and unearthly characters—to breathe in it something of the holy atmosphere of heaven; to spread the sacred influence of Scriptural principle over the sphere in which you move; to win others round you to join in the same blessed course; and endeavor daily to attain a nearer resemblance to him whom you adore, and a more intimate fellowship with Him whom you love. This is to keep yourself "unspotted from the world."—Rev. E. Craig.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH AT ROME.

St. Peter's church is the largest, and far the most expensive structure in the world. The area of its noble piazza is eleven thousand and fifty-five feet long; its front is one hundred and sixty feet high, and three hundred and ninety-six feet wide; it is six hundred and seventy-three feet long, and four hundred and forty-four feet at transept, or widest part; that is to say, it covers about seven acres. With these general ideas of the building, let us enter it.

We immediately observe, on the right and left of the door, statues, apparently of children, cherubs, that sustain marble vases of holy water. We approach them, and find that they are giants more than six feet high. We see at a little distance, on the pilasters and just above the pedestal, sculptured doves; and they appear to the eye of no very extraordinary size, and we think that we can easily lay our hand on them. We approach, and find that we can scarcely reach to touch them, and they are eighteen inches or two feet long. We advance along the mighty central nave, and we see, nearly at the termination of it and beneath the dome, the high altar, surmounted by a canopy, raised on four twisted pillars of bronze. The pillars and canopy seem to be of very suitable elevation for the place, and yet we soon learn that they are nine feet high.

The dome is one hundred and seventy-nine feet high, and it is raised two hundred and seventy-seven feet above the floor of the church, making four hundred and fifty-six feet from the floor to the top of the dome; its walls are twenty-three feet thick. It is sustained by four square pillars, two hundred and twenty-three feet in circumference. That is to say, each of these pillars, or masses of masonry, is nearly sixty feet on each side, and therefore as large as one of our common-sized churches, if it were raised up and set on the end.

There is a small church and an adjoining house on the Strada Felice (one of the principal streets of Rome) designedly built so as to be together equal to the size of one of these columns. And yet these columns do not seem to be in the way at all; they do not seem to occupy any disproportionate space; they do not encumber the mighty pavement

A walk in St. Peter's is something by itself; a thing not to be had, nor anything like it anywhere else in the world. The immensity of the place, its immense, unequalled magnificence, the charming temperature of the air, preserved the same all the year round, by the vastness of the mass of masonry, the incense-breathing walls (for there is literally an odor of sanctity always here, from the daily burning of incense), the rich, beautiful, variegated marble columns, the altars, the tombs on every side, the statues, the paintings, the fine medallions, in marble, of the heads of saints and fathers of the church, which are set into the sides of the columns in great numbers, then the arches on arches that present themselves to the view in every direction; and, if the walk be toward evening, the music of the vesper hymn, now swelling in full chorus upon the ear, and then dying away, as the music changes, or the walk leads you near the chapel whence it proceeds, or farther from it; all this, with the gathering shadows of approaching evening, the slowly gathering shadows in arch and dome, makes a walk in St. Peter's like nothing else.

The fountains in front of St. Peter's especially, are really glorious. They rise thirty or forty feet into the air, and come down in a shower. The quantity of water thrown up is so great, and the streams as they spring out from the basin are made so to diverge, that they present the appearance of two trees, one on each side of the piazza. The fountains are partly resolved into drops and mists, and a rainbow may always be seen opposite the sun. Every time one sees them, they seem a new mystery and beauty; and when the sky is so fair, so glorious a thing, that you feel almost as if you could kneel down and worship it, they appear like a cloud of incense, pure, bright, resplendent, offered up to that supernal splendor and purity.—Sel. by J. N. B.

INTEREST TO HEAR.

Bro. Couch:—Last Sunday was a good day with the brethren at Steadman Hall, Hartford. I spoke to them with freedom on the great topic of the advent of Christ, and the glorious kingdom of God, to be expected at once, according to the prophetic view, which increases in magnitude and grandness of proportion every moment.

Many of the old and tried Adventists of other days—days of interest that were the result of studying the written declarations of the prophets, from Moses down to the apostles—were present, and hailed the preaching on prophecy with joy.

Our venerable Bro. Deming, of East Hartford, now aged, and yet active, mentally and physically, was present, and a blessing to the assembled body. We saw also, our much respected and venerable Bro. Tennant, who was strong in the faith, and very energetic in mind. Sr. Sage was one of the aged ones, who are still firm in the truth. Bro. Tiffany, with many other brothers and sisters, whose heads are white, including Sr. Dickinson, widow of Eld. H. H. Dickinson, were present. The meeting was full; old friends and new friends were there. There was a good representation, and a taking hold with the speaker, which made a good interest.

I could not but refer to old times of interest, where, thirty years agone, the Millerite interest prevailed in our State, and Dr. Stephen Ting once lectured in the vast Centre Church, on the four Universal Monarchies, just as Bro. Miller had done, till he got down through Rome, making the fifth monarchy literal, when some one in the back part of the audience whispered, "millennium." There is an increase of interest with those who are not known as believers. A general stirring up was begun.

We need the old-fashioned kind of effort and study of truth. It is often said that the time brought us out. It was prophetic preaching, without a doubt, which started the flock upon the inquiry concerning Christ's coming. I do believe that the latter rain, or preaching on the prophecies, will be found just as timely and essential as formerly.

At the close of the preaching service in the afternoon, we had the Lord's Supper, and I suppose nearly fifty remained. It seemed a goodly number for Hartford. We renewed our covenant and our courage. My association with the dear friends in Hartford, in days gone by, has been pretty thorough. Upon this question we know each other well, and this late renewal of acquaintance is pleasant, and, I hope, profitable. W. S. CAMPBELL.

THOSE BIRTH SURPRISES.

WARREN TEFFT.

I was highly pleased with Bro. H. F. Carpenter's "Birth Surprises," and would make the same distinction he does between gennao and tikto or prototokos, but should prefer the rendering of one begotten, and the other born.

Greenfield, if we understand him, defines gennao to represent a first cause, as to beget, to generate, etc.; and as a metaphor, to produce, excite, give occasion to, effect. Hence, when used metaphorically of the Spirit's work in man, it refers, we believe, to regeneration or conversion only, and not to the quickening of the body. There is a distinction between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked; the latter being simply called forth as Lazarus was. For out of the twenty-four instances of its use, there are very few cases where it would not read just as harmoniously with the context as given in our common version, to render it beget, begotten, conceive, gender, as it is now rendered in fifty-nine cases out of the ninety-four. And as the most of these few cases are, if we mistake not, either participles or verbs of the past tense referring to the primeval cause, as Matt. 1 : 16, Luke 1 : 35, John 1 : 13, so rendered by eminent critics, we see no good reason why they all should not be, and we believe they do refer to the procreative principle.

We believe this word might with propriety be rendered begotten in every instance. But there are some fifty-six cases where it would seem impossible to render it born, agreeably to the context. Eminent critics nor only render the above cited texts, begotten; but also 1 John 2 : 29 : 4 : 7, and 5 : 18. It would hardly seem probable that one word would be used to represent two different things, or two conditions so unlike each other as begetting and birth, or regeneration and immortality; especially, while we have words which do represent the latter conditions.

Again, tikto and prototokos seem to necessitate a rendering either by born, or an equivalent word. And they are so rendered by the best critics. Prototokos, beyond dispute, used metaphorically to represent the immortal state. Rom. 8 : 29; Col. 1 : 18. We believe that we have no good evidence that gennao is ever so used. Its primal use, according to Greenfield, is to beget, to generate. But the primal use of tikto, from which prototokos is derived, is to be, to bear, to bring forth children; and prototokos, from protos, the first in time, order; and tikto to be born, first-born.

The above definitions not only clearly define these words, but also make an important distinction in their use.

Again, there would seem to be a great impropriety even in a metaphorical birth without a begetting first.

THERE IS ANOTHER MAN.

During a heavy storm off the coast of Spain, a dismantled merchantman was observed by a British frigate drifting before the gale. Every eye and glass were on her, and a canvass shelter, on a deck almost level with the sea, suggested the idea that there might be life on board.

With all his faults, no man is more alive to humanity than the rough and hardy mariner; and so the order instantly sounds to put the ship about, and presently a boat puts off with instructions to bear down upon the wreck. Away after that drifting hulk go these gallant men through the swell of a roaring sea; they reach it; they shout; and now a strange object rolls out of that canvass screen against the lee shroud of a broken mast. Hauled into a boat, it proves to be the trunk of a man, bent head and knees together, so dried and shrivelled as to be hardly felt within the ample clothes, and so very light that a mere boy lifted it on board.

It is laid on the deck; in sorrow and pity the crew gathered around it; it shows signs of life; they draw nearer; it moves, and then mutters—mutters in a deep, sepulchral voice, "There is another man!" Saved himself, the first use the saved one made of speech was to seek to save another. Oh! learn that blessed lesson. Be daily practicing it. And so long as in our homes, among our friends, in this wreck of a world which is drifting down to ruin, there lives an unconverted one, there is "another man;" let us go to that man and plead for Christ; and go to Christ and plead for that man; the cry, "Lord, save me, I perish," changed into one as welcome to a Savior's ear, "Lord, save them, they perish."—Thomas Guthrie.

THE GOODNESS OF GOD.

L. B. WEAVER.

Dear Ones in Jesus:—Never in all my christian experience did I long for Jesus to come more than now. His goodness and mercy to me have been so great that it makes me desire to see him. I love him with all my powers, and I do feel that in and through the goodness of God I am spared to the present time.

I do love to look over the past, and see how good the Lord has been to me. Many times, when it seemed as if the darkness around me in temporal matters never would flee away, have I heard his gentle whispers of love, "Fear not, I am with thee: be not dismayed, I am thy God."

Why, it does seem to me that there is enough in the Word of God to stimulate every child of his to do the best he can to please him in all things. To think that all the days of our life he has been around us, taking care of us as none other could, keeping us safe in dangers seen and unseen, and giving us the blessings we have so much needed, and, when pressed with care, and anxious thoughts have filled the mind, how quickly they have been dispelled by his whispering in our ear the sweet promise, "I will never leave nor forsake thee." It has often cheered and encouraged my poor, sad, aching heart, when so pressed down with care that nothing but Jesus could help me bear it.

Thus it was with me, only a few days ago. I was not discouraged nor disheartened, for I knew I had a rich Father, but it seemed that all our needs kept pressing in at the same time. Wood was needed, for it was cold, house rent due; and I, of myself, was as helpless as an infant. I went to the Lord and told him just how I was situated, and told him he knew I could not pay any debts or get anything without money to do it with! And O, how I besought him to send me the means to pay the house rent if no more. For I knew they were in need of it. I believed it would all be as the Lord thought best. I rested and trusted in him, as I have done for years. I felt not a doubt in my heart. I knew I was owned and blessed of God, and that whatever was for my good would be done. When my little niece went to the Office, I secretly prayed God to send help that day if possible. When she came home she gave me the mail. I opened a letter, and to my joy and thanksgiving I found in it five dollars from "A Friend."

May the dear Lord bless and reward them far more than words can ever begin to express. I never can begin to tell you how much good you have done me.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THANKSGIVING DINNERS.

As the time approaches for the annual day of national thanksgiving, the younger members of most families begin to indulge pleasant anticipations of a grand "thanksgiving dinner" with a roast turkey for the central object and a profusion of pies, nuts, cakes, sweetmeats, and other toothsome eatables, hygienic and unhygienic—mostly the latter, for the question of hygiene seldom comes into the account in these holiday feasts.

At the risk of calling down upon our head an avalanche of indignant protests from the little ones who may not appreciate our generous motives, we cannot refrain from reminding our readers of the great injury which commonly results from these abuses of the digestive organs. The food provided on these occasions being usually very "rich," there is an almost irresistible tendency to eat too much. Thanksgiving dinners have sent to the cold grave many a gay participant in the mirth and good cheer of these social occasions. Overeating seems to be quite the fashion at such times, and it seems to be considered as a matter of course that one should be somewhat indisposed the next day, just as a man expects to feel bad for a day or two after a spree. It will not be at all improper to characterize these festive occasions as sprees, for indulgence of the appetite is really a species of intemperance . . .

A relish for simple food can be maintained only by abstaining entirely from the use of food of a contrary character. Occasional indulgence keeps old appetites alive and the taste perverted, and renders simple food unpalatable. Total abstinence is as necessary in dietetic reforms as in any other branch of temperance reform. . . .

We have no objections to "thanksgiving dinners," or "holiday dinners," or dinners upon any other special occasions. We are decidedly in favor of such social seasons; our only concern is about the character of the dinners. Let us have an abundance of good cheer. No one has a better right to be thankful than a hygienist, and of all others a hygienist certainly ought to be the last to desecrate a day which should be sacred with memories of Heaven's munificence, by violating well-known precepts planted in man's nature for the purpose of securing to him the greatest possible degree of happiness.—Health Reformer.

DR. WILLARD PARKER says that those who are much addicted to the use of tobacco, or who work in the manufacture of snuff or cigars, never recover soon or healthy from injury or fever. The Emperor Napoleon had his attention called in 1862 to the effect of tobacco on the mind, by a report which showed that the cases of insanity and paralysis had increased quite regularly with the increase of the revenue from the tobacco tax. This led him to order an examination of the effect of tobacco upon the students in the schools and colleges. It was found that those who did not use tobacco were stronger, better scholars, and had a higher moral record than those who used it. The result was that an edict was issued forbidding its use in the national institutions.

BURNS AND SCALDS.—Dr. R. H. Allnatt writes to the Times in reference to the late lamentable bursting of a boiler on the Thunderer, man-of-war, at Portsmouth:—"As an old medical man, and from personal observation, I can vouch for the efficacy of the following remedy suggested by Lord Ebury some years ago. The common whiting of commerce, reduced by cold water to the consistence of thick cream, is to be spread on a light linen cloth, and the whole burnt surface instantly covered, and thus excluded from the action of the air. The ease it affords is instantaneous, and it only requires to be kept moist by subsequent occasional sprinklings of cold water.

A GOOD PRESCRIPTION.—Sound sleep, a vigorous digestion and a good appetite may easily be attained by regular exercise and honest work in some honorable calling. And if you would add a zest to your life that will be truly refreshing, and enjoy a peace of conscience that passeth understanding, you have only to love God and demonstrate it to the world by doing his commandments.

COMING OF CHRIST.

WRITTEN ABOUT THE YEAR 1843 BY A. H. RENNIER.

O! who may the day of coming abide?
Who shall stand when the Savior appears?
Shall the wicked, who even his coming derides,
Or the sinner, who sports with his fears?

Will the worldling be willing to part with his all,
And rejoice his appearing to see?
Will he who refuses to come at his call,
From his just indignation be free?

He comes to establish his kingdom on earth,
His purchased possession to claim;
Not as once he appeared, a poor babe of low birth,
When to ransom lost sinners he came.

He comes as by prophets in Scripture foretold,
As David's legitimate heir,
His glorious character then to unfold,
With his people his glory to share.

THE FINAL HARVEST AND VINTAGE.

A SERMON BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

"And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped."—Rev. 14: 14–16. [Read on to end of verse 20].

It appears that this harvest and vintage is to follow the destruction of Babylon, after which there shall soon come the ingathering of the saints and the destruction of the wicked. Truly, when I think of the terrible power of Rome, and the mischief it does directly and indirectly, I would cry with the souls of those martyred for their testimony, "How long, O Lord, how long?" Let the angel "take the millstone and cast it into the flood, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city, Babylon, be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." . . .

Our Lord cometh quickly. He may come to-morrow, or to-night, even while the words are yet in our mouths—it is for us to be as men who look for their Lord, knowing not whether he will come at the cock-crowing, at the morning watch, at midday or midnight; only knowing this, that he will come.

There is no indistinctness about one thing, viz., that there will be a severing of the righteous from the wicked; that there will be a rewarding of those who have believed and been found faithful, and equally a rewarding of a terrible kind of those who have lived, and died, and passed into a future state without being reconciled by the death of his Son. Of this—of the judgment of the righteous and the wicked—we have visions now before us, and of these visions I am going to speak; but first, the text gives us a description of the Judge.

"I looked and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle."

1. Notice first his throne. It is a cloud. I suppose that it may be a throne visible to mankind—not here on earth as the thrones of mortal kings must be, but yonder in the azure heaven—a throne that will be visible in all places, and which God himself shall make visible to all human eyes at once, for every eye shall see him, and they also which have crucified him.

It is a cloud for mystery, for we shall never be able to understand all the secrets of the mediatorial sovereignty of Christ. It is a cloud for glory, for it is not like any human sovereignty. It is a government which as far exceeds all the governments of kings, and princes, and magistrates, as the heavens are above the earth. They have but delegated power to judge, but he is the judge of all the earth by right divine; and so he cometh not with a throne of ivory, or pearl, or gold, or a throne bedecked with royal jewels, but it is a cloud which shall reflect the brightness of God himself, upon which the Judge of the last dread assize shall come.

A white cloud it is said—to signify, doubtless, its matchless purity, for there will be no bribing of that great Judge. There will be no flaws in any sentence that he will pass. He knows everything, and his keen eye will read the secrets of the heart. Man judgeth according to the outward appearance, but he shall search the hearts and try the reins of the children of men. There will be no mistake committed by him in any case. No sentence too severe, no reward too great, no innocent one condemned, no guilty one suffered to escape. That throne shall be for whiteness exceeding dazzling, and glistening like light itself—a throne of jasper without a stain.

Perhaps when said to be white, the word "white" bears the force which it generally does, of lustrous, bright, dazzling. The inconceivable glory of that throne shall surpass anything that was ever dreamed of in the imagination of man. Bright shall it be with divine justice, and power, and truth, and holiness, brighter than aught that could be created, for it is the uncreated One that shall sit on that throne; brighter than anything that has ever been stained by the fall, for He shall come in whom is no speck of sin.

I wish you could have imagination enough, or rather that I had, to depict that cloud that shall come sailing up, perhaps some summer's day, perhaps when winter is chilling all men, perhaps at dead of night, and it shall come noiselessly sailing up, and men shall start from their beds, or lift up their eyes from their daily labor, and there shall be the signal. There shall be no mistaking it or avoiding it, and the trumpet shall ring out loud and clear, "Behold, he cometh," and his saints shall welcome him, and on the other hand, those that know him not, neither obey him, shall be filled with sore dismay, and ask for a hiding-place from the face, even the face of him that sitteth upon the throne. This much about his throne.

Now, let us come a little closer, and observe the Judge himself. Behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud sat one like unto the Son of Man. The Son of Man, that greatest of all the sons of men, who is also something more than a Son of man. The Son of Man, the most manly of all men, the truest man of men, the Adam—the second Adam—the Adam who never had that sin which is not necessary to manhood, for God made manhood without sin, a true manhood, the God-manhood—he shall sit upon that throne.

And what a sight will it be to see him, when resplendent shine the nail prints. Every eye shall see his wounds. There will be the Man of Nazareth sitting there. The gentle Savior, now a Judge, the loving, tender-hearted, weeping Savior, now come to execute vengeance upon his enemies and to reward his friends. Do not draw any inferences of comfort, you that are living without him, from the gentleness of his character. You do not know that there is no man in the world that is so indignant against evil as the man that is wondrously benevolent.

Give me a cruel man, and he can read of the Bulgarian atrocities without burning wrath. No! he thinks them trifles; but in proportion as the man is full of gentleness and love, see how he burns. Listen as he utters words of indignation, almost too strong, when he sees how the innocent have suffered.

And Christ, the gentle and loving—oh! how terrible will he be when he comes to judge men for offences against a gracious God, for blasphemies and profanities against a God of love, for neglects on the part of some of you, unkind neglects of him who shed his blood for you, and despisings of him who gave his Son that sinners might not perish; the very gentleness and love of Christ will make him sternly just, when he shall sit upon his throne, and that character of Christ which some men seem to paint all in rose color—the Christ I often read about—is not the Christ of the New Testament, for he was kindly stern as well as supremely kind.

I admire him as much when he says, "Woe unto you Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites," as when I read, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." I know, as I read his sermon, that never preacher preached the wrath of God more terribly than he, for the most awful words about hell are the words of Jesus Christ, and this not because he was not loving, but because he was, and so would not have men die in ignorance, and live in sin, and reap the terrible fruits of sin, without being honestly told what they would have to expect in the world to come.

Yes, it will be Christ, the Son of Mary, and the Son of God, who shall sit upon that great white throne, and this we may rejoice in, that we know his sentence will be just. He shall judge the poor and needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. When he cometh it will be he who ever was the poor man's friend. He regardeth not the person of any, neither is abashed in the presence of princes and kings. He shall separate the righteous from the wicked with an impartial hand, and measure out the doom of each without fear or flattery.

Oh, what will it be to see him sitting there? To some of us it will be joy, joy unspeakable, that he should come at last to judge the quick and the dead, even he who once stood at the bar of Pilate; but to those who have rejected him it will be confusion of face to think that now he whom they would not have as a Savior they must have for a Judge, and that whereas they said, "We will not have this man to reign over us," they must have this man to judge them and to condemn them. So you see something of the throne and also of the Judge.

Now comes His adornment: "On the cloud One sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown." That head which once wore a crown of thorns is to wear a crown of gold, symbolical of his sovereign power; power and dominion are his due who stood condemned at Pilate's bar. There will be no questioning then but what he is a king. He died with this above his head,—"This is the King of the Jews." He shall come again without that inscription, with a crown upon his brow, which will make all men confess that he is King of kings and Lord of lords.

You shall not be judged by any secondary judge. Your final doom shall not be left to some angel, but the Lord is the judge himself. The Lord himself shall judge his people. "Behold he cometh with clouds." Expect ye him. The Greek signifies that he comes with the crown of victory. When men ran in a race, or contended in chariots in the games, they awarded them the wreath of victory; and this is what Christ had upon his head—a crown of gold, a crown gained in fight, in battle. He that came here to struggle, wrestle, bleed, and die, has crushed his foes beneath his feet, and he wears the fillet of gold about his glorious brows, betokening that he has conquered sin, death and hell.

To my mind it is a part of the splendor of his coming which I anticipate with delight, that he shall come as the very Christ who said "It is finished!" as the Christ who "led captivity captive, and received gifts for men." The conqueror over all our enemies, he shall bruise Satan under our feet. Surely he it is that shall come to judge the earth with righteousness and the people with equity.

Now notice his power. The instrument of it indicates it. "In his hand a sharp sickle"—a sickle for his reaping work. That is his sceptre, and that sickle is sharp. What means it but that he has come with earnest work to do? His reward is with him, and his work before him. It is a sharp sickle, for short work will he make of the earth. He will cut it short in righteousness. He has power to judge both the righteous and the wicked, and to execute doom; and he has come not to delay or to linger any longer; not to offer tokens of peace, not to parley and to hold a truce with men, but now to take them by their word and settle it once for all; to reap them whether they corn or cluster—to reap the harvest and to reap the vintage too. Let your eyes fix on that wondrous spectacle, and may God grant it may affect all our hearts!

II. And now I have, secondly, to lead your thoughts onward to the first scene, which is the harvest or the ingathering of the righteous. "And another angel came out of the Temple, crying, with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped." That is the harvest, and here you have the notice that this is the case. This is what I shall speak of first, and subsequently the vintage. What does this mean? Does it mean that there is to come first the gathering of the righteous, and afterwards the gathering of the wicked? I think so, however, because the apostle Paul said that he labored that he might be accounted worthy of the resurrection from among the dead; and I read there is a first resurrection and a second resurrection.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for upon such the second death hath no power." I read in the Revelation that the rest of the dead live not till the thousand years are finished, and I am unable to give any meaning to these passages except this, that there shall first be a resurrection of the righteous at the coming of the Lord Jesus, that they will reign with Christ for the thousand years in triumph, and then there shall come a resurrection of the wicked for their final overthrow. And there seem to me to be many texts which indicate this wondrous truth—the taking away of the righteous from among the wicked, and a severing of them.

I think also there are other texts which indicate that the two are judged at once, for they shall all appear before him, and he shall divide them the one from the other, as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats. Seeing some passages would indicate two resurrections, and others but one judgment, may they not both meet in this fact, that if there be a thousand years' interval, yet shall the judgment itself be all as one event, and with the Lord be as one day. This I desire, that you and I may be reckoned blessed and holy, and may have part in the first resurrection, that upon us the second death may have no power.

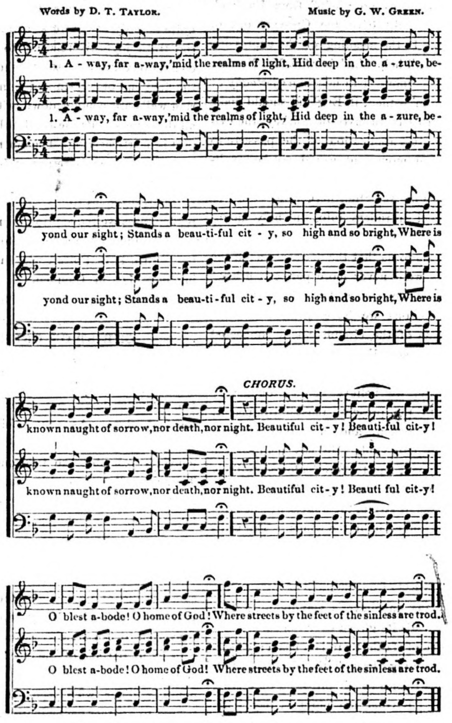
Perhaps they are put in this order because the gathering in of the righteous is Christ's first and main business. This is his love for them—this his joy. Judgment is his strong arm; but when he comes, the first object of his coming shall be to gather in the saints together unto him, those that have made a covenant with him by sacrifice, and so shall he gather together first his own, his wheat which he himself planted and watered with his bloody sweat, so that this shall be the first transaction of that august tribunal—the gathering in of the righteous.

Notice, too, that there will be no difficulty, when the great white cloud shall come, in discerning between the righteous and the wicked. In Christ's famous parable the wicked are compared to wild wheat, which we translate tares, and the righteous to the true wheat; and it is said, "Let both grow together till the harvest," for this reason, that wild wheat was so like the true wheat, that they could not separate the one from the other without rooting up both together.

But see how changed it is now. It is not wheat and tares now, it is wheat and grapes. There is no making a mistake there, for the veriest child knows the difference. So, at last, my dear hearers, there will no difficulty in judging who you are and what you are. When Christ shall come every man shall be seen in his true colors. Men will know themselves, and discern themselves in that tremendous day, and looking up into that great throne of cloud which shall shine like a looking-glass, each man shall see his face reflected in it, and judge himself, and be, in his own conscience, the pronouncer of his own doom.

God's Beautiful City.

Words by D. T. TAYLOR. Music by G. W. GREEN.



2.
They roam through the gardens of endless spring;
They crowd all thy portals on rushing wing;
While the echoing domes of the palace ring
With the hymns of the angels that shout and sing.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
Hark! hark! again! the angelic strain,—
As gleams through the crystal that burnished train.

3.
There the life-fires brighten, and burn, and roll
Over diamonds that sparkle, o'er sands of gold;
Where to breathe the sweet air yields a bliss untold,
And the dwellers immortal shall never grow old.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
We pierce the skies with longing eyes,
And yearn to inherit the golden prize.

4.
It is said that the King, in his power sublime,
When the last sands shall drop from the glass of time,
And our world shall be robed in her Eden prime,
Will bring down that city to gladden earth's clime.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
Bright capital where saints will dwell,
And reign on the throne with Immanuel.

5.
As jewels flash on the brow of a queen,—
As the jasper and ruby in crowns are seen,—
God's city wrapped in its silver sheen,
Will be set like a gem in the new earth's green.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
City of flowers and peaceful bowers!
Come down and illumine this dark world of ours.

6.
I have heard in that city they wait for me;
That its gates stand open wide and free;
That the ransomed the King in his beauty may see,
And live in his presence eternally.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
In royal state blest mansions wait,
And beckon us on through the pearly gate.

7.
I shall go where the summer will always bloom;
I shall walk no more amid trial and gloom;
I shall bid farewell to the withering tomb;
I shall deck my brow with the conqueror's plume.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
Let us enter in a crown to win!
Our words but half tell of the glory within.

Oh, what a day will that be when each man shall be seen to be what he really is! The one reason why they will be so distinct will be because they will be so ripe. "Thrust in thy sickle, for the time has come for thee to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe." Every saint will be ripe when Christ comes. All his own will be ripe. The little babes that died almost before they had lived, and the grey-headed men who fell asleep in Jesus, will all be ripe. We are unripe now. We are green corn as yet. Some of you, by God's grace, are beginning to think very little of yourselves, and you are getting ripe; but many are holding up their heads, and thinking they are wonderfully perfect. They are the greenest of all the wheat.

They want a long time to get that nonsense out of them before they get ripe at all; but when the Lord comes they will all be ripe, and the majesty of Christ seen in them all. Oh, may we be amongst the ripe wheat! God grant we may!

And they were easily reaped. All that was wanted was for the great Reaper to thrust in his sickle, and as soon as ever he had done so, the harvest was reaped. Now, I want to draw your attention to one fact, which is, I think, the great point in this vision. He that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped. See, then, who the Reaper is: it is a crowned one. He that cometh on the throne of cloud, it is he that reaps his wheat. Oh, what a glory is this! It is not trusted to angels. The vintage is done by angels, but the gathering of the elect is left to the hand of him that bought them with his hand nailed to the tree.

It is delightful to think that when we, who have loved him below, are like grain ready to be gathered into his Father's garner, he will not delegate the work to Gabriel or Michael, but he himself, bending from that throne of light, will take the golden sickle and reap his own, and take them like sheaves that are his own reward into his own bosom, and rejoice in it. You shall be forever with the Lord, and your dealings not with the Lord of justice, but with the Lord of love, your Savior who hath redeemed you unto himself forever. He it was that thrust in the sickle, and the harvest was reaped. Search yourselves to-night. Judge yourselves whether ye be wheat of his sowing, whether ye have believed in him, whether his grace has visited your souls, for if so, well shall it be with you in that great harvest day; but if not, beware and tremble.

III. The vintage comes last, and here is the description of it:—

"And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud voice to him that had the sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God."

I would speak with great solemnity, and use not a single metaphor beyond the tenor of the Word of God. Observe that this comes last. Here is the close of all. Christ has done his loved work—his favorite work of gathering his own; and now comes up this strange work of his, which nevertheless must be done, for God is just. His very love demands justice. He were not love if he allowed sin to go unpunished, and the rejection of his sovereign grace to be treated as though it were a trifle. So it comes at last. You may go on sinning the next twenty or thirty, and some of you perchance fifty years, if God in his long-suffering bear with you, but it will come at last. As surely as you live it will come at last, and you will hear the trumpet sound, and these are the sounds you will hear:—

"Come to judgment, come to judgment,
Come away."

. . . Observe that the crowned one did not reap the vintage, but there is an angel appointed with a sharp sickle to do it, and he is bidden to do it by another angel which had power over fire. A terrible suggestion here—the angel of wrath: that angel that smote the host of Sennacherib; that angel that went through the land of Egypt at the dead of night, and left the first-born slain in every house; that angel that pulled up the sluice of Almighty wrath, and let the fiery flood fall on Sodom and Gomorrah—the angel that hath power over fire, makes his appearance.

Oh, transgressors! it is no pleasure of mine to bring you to confront what this may mean; but I do ask you to confront it. Not the angel of mercy, not the angel of love, but the angel that hath power over fire, shall then come to the front, and demand, in the name of justice, that you who are the wild grapes of the earth shall be gathered and cast into the winepress of the wrath of God.

You observe there is no difficulty in discovering who they are. They are readily seen; and so you that come to chapel and to the church, and yet have rotten hearts, will be found out then. You that have been baptized, and perhaps have come to the communion table, and yet have not loved the Lord, will be found out then. There will be no difficulty about it. If your hearts were not right before the living God, you will be discovered to be clusters of the vine of the earth, and the vintage will take place for you. These are reaped by the angel, as I have said, not reaped by the great King himself, and when reaped they are cast into the great wine-press of the wrath of God.

Can you see the clusters being thrown in? can you see the angelic reapers hurling them, cluster after cluster, into that great and terrible wine-press, and can you see the result? I will read it: "And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs."

Crushed every one, not a whole cluster or berry left—crushed beneath divine justice. So dreadful is the doom that the figure is all too forcible of itself. It needs no words to impress it upon you. Imagination has been the guide of some men when they have tried to explain these furlongs, and all that; but it means that God has fought his last and dreadful battle. "Ah!" said he, "I will ease me of mine adversaries." "Beware, ye that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you."

These are his own words; and what have I to do but—now that I have spoken them, not to my pleasure, but to my heart's breaking while I speak—what have I to do but say, escape from all this? See to it that ye never come to know by actual experience the meaning of these dreadful symbols. See to it, men and women, that none of you be found amongst the clusters of the vine of the earth. You will be, except you be renewed in heart, and the blood of Jesus Christ shall cleanse you.

I trust that many of you have already believed on Jesus to the saving of your souls. If so, bow with solemn reverence before the throne of justice, and expect his advent; but if you have never believed in Jesus, "Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way while his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Oh, that to-night you would seek his face, whose wrath you cannot bear. While he stands with the silver sceptre outstretched, kiss and bow before it ere he puts that sceptre away, and takes the rod of iron with which he shall break the nations as if they were but potter's vessels.

They that will not have Christ as the Lamb, shall know him as the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Bow before him. Oh, that he would help you so to do by his divine Spirit! We shall praise and you shall have salvation. Amen and amen.—The Christian Herald.

"THE NIGHT IS FAR SPENT."

The day of the restitution spoken of by the prophets ever since the world began is at hand (Acts 3: 21)—when the Lord shall return to restore all things, and make them new—when the redeemed earth shall be once for all, far more glorious and grand than the created world ever was—when the sunshine of God's presence shall again illumine the earth, and he shall reign, not as Adam in Eden only, but throughout the whole world—when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and the Lord, as King on his throne of glory, shall reign triumphantly supreme over a ransomed and restored world. This is a day which does not come into the thoughts of multitudes of believers; they are quite unconscious of its rapid approach, and therefore they are not expecting or looking for it.

When our blessed Lord was on earth, according to Roman custom, the night was divided into four watches, between sunset and sunrise, of the duration of three hours each. So there are four dispensations, or times in the night, of which we are speaking—the Adamic time, which was from Adam to Noah; the Patriarchal, from Noah to Moses; the Levitical, from Moses to Christ; and the Christian, from Christ in meekness to the same Christ in manifested glory.

In the first three hours of the night, the light which had been, gradually dies away; so it was from the day of Adam, the light gradually died away until the earth was filled with violence. Again, in the last three hours of the night—from three to six in the morning—the dawn is breaking more and more, and the light, which increasingly prevails, is from the sun, which is coming to its rising. So it is now; the light we have is from Christ, and as the time approaches, and the sands of time go on sinking, the dawn of the heaven of glory breaks upon us, and the fair sweet morn awakes;—but not to those who are asleep.

It is not the case that multitudes are asleep even among believers? They know not it is the night-time; they overlook the fact of the curse which is on the fair creation of God; they consider not the dispensational time; like some worldlings, they, in a spiritual way, turn night into day, and expect and do in the night what the Scriptures only promise for the day-time. Surely it is "high time" to awake and ascertain what is the time—how that really and truly it is a long way on toward morning.

There are two very manifest signs by which the approach of day is marked in nature—the increase of light, and the songs of the birds. Now it is easy to note these signs in a spiritual sense. It may be asked, Was there ever a period in the Church's history when there was more gospel light, and light more widely spread, than at the present time? Were there ever more Bibles, more preachers, more clear and plain statements of the truth? We live in an age of great light and privilege.

Then as to the songs; was there ever a time when there was more thanksgiving and praise to God resounding throughout the world? Waves upon waves of praise are breaking ceaselessly on the shore at the foot of the throne of God, and he is worthy. There is no end of hymn-books, and praise-meetings, and services of song, and the song of thanksgiving and deliverance is now in thousands of places where death and destruction prevailed. What is this but the harbinger of the morning? The birds do not sing to bring up the sun, but because it is coming; and so we sing because our light is coming in increasing glory.

A vessel was once bearing her living freight along to the place of destination. Among many passengers she had one who was manacled and fettered, and going to be delivered up to the officers of justice for trial. He did not rejoice in the thought of nearing that shore; he could not refrain from looking over his shoulder hurriedly, to see how near it was. It was very near, and there was an ominous, dark-looking conveyance awaiting him. There was no hope in him, it was all dread and conscious foreboding; he was to be tried, and he knew beforehand what the sentence would be.

Another sat on the deck of the vessel, quietly perusing a newspaper. He was so taken up with the things of this world—its money-market and its frivolities, its pleasures and crimes, accidents and offences—that he was not aware that the vessel was nearing the shore, and did not seem to care whether she did so or not; perhaps, if anything, he had rather she did not, if the paper was deeply interesting. And so it is with too many who allow themselves to be carried along the stream of time, without any hope; and too dead, or asleep, or indifferent, to have any fears.

Another passenger there was who had long been straining his eyes to see the looked for shore; and as it began to appear, he might have been observed going further and further forward, until now he is seen at the very bows of the vessel, looking with eager eyes upon the concourse on the shore. Anon he recognizes some loved one, and is recognized; he knows and feels he is, and waves his hand; his countenance beams with joyful anticipation of meeting those who had gone before. This is just the picture of the christian's hope; but the reality is even beyond this, for the christian is bidden to look for more than arriving at the glorious shore, he is commanded to look for the Lord himself from heaven, "the chief among ten thousand, the altogether lovely," the central object of hope. How is it with you? Are you awake to this scene, or asleep?

Beyond all doubt, it must be admitted that we live in times when events seem to come upon one another with accumulated force. Now it seems as if it were impossible to stop; we must go on with the age, and the rush of circumstances, and in the progress to no one knows whither. Already men's hearts begin to fail with fear, for looking at the things which are coming upon the earth. But in the midst of all the hurry and rush, the christian at least can stand unmoved. He is with his Lord, and his Lord with him; midst burning worlds he will still stand lifting up his head, safe in the keeping of him who has all power in heaven and on earth; he need not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be cast into the depth of the sea.—Rev. W. Haslam, M. A., of London, Eng. —Messiah's Herald.

LOWERING THE STANDARD.

It is lamentable to contemplate the tendency to lower the standard of christian experience. This prevails with reference to all forms and grades of experience, but specially so in regard to the early stages of christian life. Repentance is almost entirely ignored. There is not usually that solemn, deep conviction of the great evil of sin that should be wrought in us. So numerous are the palliations and apologies for sin, that some begin to doubt whether it is indeed as great an evil as represented. Those christians who contend sin may sometimes be needed to effect in us humility, induce the conviction that, after all, sin is but a mere infirmity, and one indeed that may be turned to good account. But the true Scriptural idea is, it is a great and fearful wrong, to be repented of and forever abandoned. This inclination to overlook the great evil of sin is followed by a corresponding underestimate of the true character of the work of conversion. The prevalent error of the times is just here. If by any means the churches could be led to a just appreciation of the work of regeneration, a wonderful reformation would follow.

It is a common idea that conversion means merely or mainly a change of opinion and purpose, and a corresponding change of external life; whereas it is a gloriously thorough and radical work, wrought in us and for us by the power of the Holy Ghost. It is not only preceded by genuine hearty repentance, but involves and includes justification, regeneration, adoption, and the witness of the Spirit. This work is attended by such manifestations that it is made obvious, not only to the man himself, but to all others around him. It is not only felt in his heart, but is also developed in his conduct. It is clear that the man is saved because of what he is and what he does. Such conversions, whenever they occur, produce good fruit, and glorify God. Oh! for a revival of old-fashioned notions about being converted.—Selected.

PRAYER.—Literally, prayer is supplication; it is asking. By asking is meant, not simply desire expressed, but paramount desire. There must be a desire for the thing asked, greater than for anything else that would be incompatible with it. This is prayer, and nothing else is. If a man may have either an estate or so much money for the asking, but cannot have both, however much he may desire the estate, he cannot really ask for it unless he desires it more than the money. And so, whatever desire a man may have of heaven, or of the presence with him of the Spirit of God, yet if he has a stronger desire for any form of worldly good, any form of expression that he might use in the guise of prayer would not be asking. It would be hypocrisy to the omniscient eye. It is a paramount desire presented to God with the submission becoming a creature, that is prayer.—Hopkins.

LIKE a morning dawn, life becomes more and more bright the longer we live, and the reason of everything becomes more clear. What puzzled us before, seems less mysterious, and the crooked paths look straighter as we approach the end.—Richter.

The World's Crisis

COMING OF CHRIST.

WRITTEN ABOUT THE YEAR 1843 BY A. H. RENNIER.

O! who may the day of coming abide?
Who shall stand when the Savior appears?
Shall the wicked, who even his coming derides,
Or the sinner, who sports with his fears?

Will the worldling be willing to part with his all,
And rejoice his appearing to see?
Will he who refuses to come at his call,
From his just indignation be free?

He comes to establish his kingdom on earth,
His purchased possession to claim;
Not as once he appeared, a poor babe of low birth,
When to ransom lost sinners he came.

He comes as by prophets in Scripture foretold,
As David's legitimate heir,
His glorious character then to unfold,
With his people his glory to share.

THE FINAL HARVEST AND VINTAGE.

A SERMON BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

"And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped."—Rev. 14: 14–16. [Read on to end of verse 20].

It appears that this harvest and vintage is to follow the destruction of Babylon, after which there shall soon come the ingathering of the saints and the destruction of the wicked. Truly, when I think of the terrible power of Rome, and the mischief it does directly and indirectly, I would cry with the souls of those martyred for their testimony, "How long, O Lord, how long?' Let the angel "take the millstone and cast it into the flood, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city, Babylon, be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." . . .

Our Lord cometh quickly. He may come to-morrow, or to-night, even while the words are yet in our mouths—it is for us to be as men who look for their Lord, knowing not whether he will come at the cock-crowing, at the morning watch, at midday or midnight; only knowing this, that he will come.

There is no indistinctness about one thing, viz., that there will be a severing of the righteous from the wicked; that there will be a rewarding of those who have believed and been found faithful, and equally a rewarding of a terrible kind of those who have lived, and died, and passed into a future state without being reconciled by the death of his Son. Of this—of the judgment of the righteous and the wicked—we have visions now before us, and of these visions I am going to speak; but first, the text gives us a description of the Judge.

"I looked and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle."

1. Notice first his throne. It is a cloud. I suppose that it may be a throne visible to mankind—not here on earth as the thrones of mortal kings must be, but yonder in the azure heaven—a throne that will be visible in all places, and which God himself shall make visible to all human eyes at once, for every eye shall see him, and they also which have crucified him.

It is a cloud for mystery, for we shall never be able to understand all the secrets of the mediatorial sovereignty of Christ. It is a cloud for glory, for it is not like any human sovereignty. It is a government which as far exceeds all the governments of kings, and princes, and magistrates, as the heavens are above the earth. They have but delegated power to judge, but he is the judge of all the earth by right divine; and so he cometh not with a throne of ivory, or pearl, or gold, or a throne bedecked with royal jewels, but it is a cloud which shall reflect the brightness of God himself, upon which the Judge of the last dread assize shall come.

A white cloud it is said—to signify, doubtless, its matchless purity, for there will be no bribing of that great Judge. There will be no flaws in any sentence that he will pass. He knows everything, and his keen eye will read the secrets of the heart. Man judgeth according to the outward appearance, but he shall search the hearts and try the reins of the children of men. There will be no mistake committed by him in any case. No sentence too severe, no reward too great, no innocent one condemned, no guilty one suffered to escape. That throne shall be for whiteness exceeding dazzling, and glistening like light itself—a throne of jasper without a stain.

Perhaps when said to be white, the word "white" bears the force which it generally does, of lustrous, bright, dazzling. The inconceivable glory of that throne shall surpass anything that was ever dreamed of in the imagination of man. Bright shall it be with divine justice, and power, and truth, and holiness, brighter than aught that could be created, for it is the uncreated One that shall sit on that throne; brighter than anything that has ever been stained by the fall, for He shall come in whom is no speck of sin.

I wish you could have imagination enough, or rather that I had, to depict that cloud that shall come sailing up, perhaps some summer's day, perhaps when winter is chilling all men, perhaps at dead of night, and it shall come noiselessly sailing up, and men shall start from their beds, or lift up their eyes from their daily labor, and there shall be the signal. There shall be no mistaking it or avoiding it, and the trumpet shall ring out loud and clear, "Behold, he cometh," and his saints shall welcome him, and on the other hand, those that know him not, neither obey him, shall be filled with sore dismay, and ask for a hiding-place from the face, even the face of him that sitteth upon the throne. This much about his throne.

Now, let us come a little closer, and observe the Judge himself. Behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud sat one like unto the Son of Man. The Son of Man, that greatest of all the sons of men, who is also something more than a Son of man. The Son of Man, the most manly of all men, the truest man of men, the Adam—the second Adam—the Adam who never had that sin which is not necessary to manhood, for God made manhood without sin, a true manhood, the God-manhood—he shall sit upon that throne.

And what a sight will it be to see him, when resplendent shine the nail prints. Every eye shall see his wounds. There will be the Man of Nazareth sitting there. The gentle Savior, now a Judge, the loving, tender-hearted, weeping Savior, now come to execute vengeance upon his enemies and to reward his friends. Do not draw any inferences of comfort, you that are living without him, from the gentleness of his character. You do not know that there is no man in the world that is so indignant against evil as the man that is wondrously benevolent.

Give me a cruel man, and he can read of the Bulgarian atrocities without burning wrath. No! he thinks them trifles; but in proportion as the man is full of gentleness and love, see how he burns. Listen as he utters words of indignation, almost too strong, when he sees how the innocent have suffered.

And Christ, the gentle and loving—oh! how terrible will he be when he comes to judge men for offences against a gracious God, for blasphemies and profanities against a God of love, for neglects on the part of some of you, unkind neglects of him who shed his blood for you, and despisings of him who gave his Son that sinners might not perish; the very gentleness and love of Christ will make him sternly just, when he shall sit upon his throne, and that character of Christ which some men seem to paint all in rose color—the Christ I often read about—is not the Christ of the New Testament, for he was kindly stern as well as supremely kind.

I admire him as much when he says, "Woe unto you Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites," as when I read, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." I know, as I read his sermon, that never preacher preached the wrath of God more terribly than he, for the most awful words about hell are the words of Jesus Christ, and this not because he was not loving, but because he was, and so would not have men die in ignorance, and live in sin, and reap the terrible fruits of sin, without being honestly told what they would have to expect in the world to come.

Yes, it will be Christ, the Son of Mary, and the Son of God, who shall sit upon that great white throne, and this we may rejoice in, that we know his sentence will be just. He shall judge the poor and needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. When he cometh it will be he who ever was the poor man's friend. He regardeth not the person of any, neither is abashed in the presence of princes and kings. He shall separate the righteous from the wicked with an impartial hand, and measure out the doom of each without fear or flattery.

Oh, what will it be to see him sitting there? To some of us it will be joy, joy unspeakable, that he should come at last to judge the quick and the dead, even he who once stood at the bar of Pilate; but to those who have rejected him it will be confusion of face to think that now he whom they would not have as a Savior they must have for a Judge, and that whereas they said, "We will not have this man to reign over us," they must have this man to judge them and to condemn them. So you see something of the throne and also of the Judge.

Now comes His adornment: "On the cloud One sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown." That head which once wore a crown of thorns is to wear a crown of gold, symbolical of his sovereign power; power and dominion are his due who stood condemned at Pilate's bar. There will be no questioning then but what he is a king. He died with this above his head,—"This is the King of the Jews." He shall come again without that inscription, with a crown upon his brow, which will make all men confess that he is King of kings and Lord of lords.

You shall not be judged by any secondary judge. Your final doom shall not be left to some angel, but the Lord is the judge himself. The Lord himself shall judge his people. "Behold he cometh with clouds." Expect ye him. The Greek signifies that he comes with the crown of victory. When men ran in a race, or contended in chariots in the games, they awarded them the wreath of victory; and this is what Christ had upon his head—a crown of gold, a crown gained in fight, in battle. He that came here to struggle, wrestle, bleed, and die, has crushed his foes beneath his feet, and he wears the fillet of gold about his glorious brows, betokening that he has conquered sin, death and hell.

To my mind it is a part of the splendor of his coming which I anticipate with delight, that he shall come as the very Christ who said "It is finished!" as the Christ who "led captivity captive, and received gifts for men." The conqueror over all our enemies, he shall bruise Satan under our feet. Surely he it is that shall come to judge the earth with righteousness and the people with equity.

Now notice his power. The instrument of it indicates it. "In his hand a sharp sickle"—a sickle for his reaping work. That is his sceptre, and that sickle is sharp. What means it but that he has come with earnest work to do? His reward is with him, and his work before him. It is a sharp sickle, for short work will he make of the earth. He will cut it short in righteousness. He has power to judge both the righteous and the wicked, and to execute doom; and he has come not to delay or to linger any longer; not to offer tokens of peace, not to parley and to hold a truce with men, but now to take them by their word and settle it once for all; to reap them whether they corn or cluster—to reap the harvest and to reap the vintage too. Let your eyes fix on that wondrous spectacle, and may God grant it may affect all our hearts!

II. And now I have, secondly, to lead your thoughts onward to the first scene, which is the harvest or the ingathering of the righteous. "And another angel came out of the Temple, crying, with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped." That is the harvest, and here you have the notice that this is the case. This is what I shall speak of first, and subsequently the vintage. What does this mean? Does it mean that there is to come first the gathering of the righteous, and afterwards the gathering of the wicked? I think so, however, because the apostle Paul said that he labored that he might be accounted worthy of the resurrection from among the dead; and I read there is a first resurrection and a second resurrection.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for upon such the second death hath no power." I read in the Revelation that the rest of the dead live not till the thousand years are finished, and I am unable to give any meaning to these passages except this, that there shall first be a resurrection of the righteous at the coming of the Lord Jesus, that they will reign with Christ for the thousand years in triumph, and then there shall come a resurrection of the wicked for their final overthrow. And there seem to me to be many texts which indicate this wondrous truth—the taking away of the righteous from among the wicked, and a severing of them.

I think also there are other texts which indicate that the two are judged at once, for they shall all appear before him, and he shall divide them the one from the other, as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats. Seeing some passages would indicate two resurrections, and others but one judgment, may they not both meet in this fact, that if there be a thousand years' interval, yet shall the judgment itself be all as one event, and with the Lord be as one day. This I desire, that you and I may be reckoned blessed and holy, and may have part in the first resurrection, that upon us the second death may have no power.

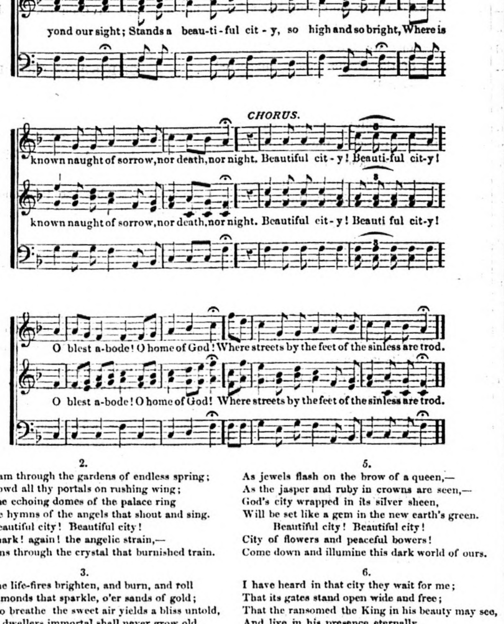
Perhaps they are put in this order because the gathering in of the righteous is Christ's first and main business. This is his love for them—this his joy. Judgment is his strong arm; but when he comes, the first object of his coming shall be to gather in the saints together unto him, those that have made a covenant with him by sacrifice, and so shall he gather together first his own, his wheat which he himself planted and watered with his bloody sweat, so that this shall be the first transaction of that august tribunal—the gathering in of the righteous.

Notice, too, that there will be no difficulty, when the great white cloud shall come, in discerning between the righteous and the wicked. In Christ's famous parable the wicked are compared to wild wheat, which we translate tares, and the righteous to the true wheat; and it is said, "Let both grow together till the harvest," for this reason, that wild wheat was so like the true wheat, that they could not separate the one from the other without rooting up both together.

But see how changed it is now. It is not wheat and tares now, it is wheat and grapes. There is no making a mistake there, for the veriest child knows the difference. So, at last, my dear hearers, there will no difficulty in judging who you are and what you are. When Christ shall come every man shall be seen in his true colors. Men will know themselves, and discern themselves in that tremendous day, and looking up into that great throne of cloud which shall shine like a looking-glass, each man shall see his face reflected in it, and judge himself, and be, in his own conscience, the pronouncer of his own doom.

God's Beautiful City.

Words by D. T. TAYLOR. Music by G. W. GREEN.



2.
They roam through the gardens of endless spring;
They crowd all thy portals on rushing wing;
While the echoing domes of the palace ring
With the hymns of the angels that shout and sing.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
Hark! hark! again! the angelic strain,—
As gleams through the crystal that burnished train.

3.
There the life-fires brighten, and burn, and roll
Over diamonds that sparkle, o'er sands of gold;
Where to breathe the sweet air yields a bliss untold,
And the dwellers immortal shall never grow old.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
We pierce the skies with longing eyes,
And yearn to inherit the golden prize.

4.
It is said that the King, in his power sublime,
When the last sands shall drop from the glass of time,
And our world shall be robed in her Eden prime,
Will bring down that city to gladden earth's clime.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
Bright capital where saints will dwell,
And reign on the throne with Immanuel.

5.
As jewels flash on the brow of a queen,—
As the jasper and ruby in crowns are seen,—
God's city wrapped in its silver sheen,
Will be set like a gem in the new earth's green.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
City of flowers and peaceful bowers!
Come down and illumine this dark world of ours.

6.
I have heard in that city they wait for me;
That its gates stand open wide and free;
That the ransomed the King in his beauty may see,
And live in his presence eternally.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
In royal state blest mansions wait,
And beckon us on through the pearly gate.

7.
I shall go where the summer will always bloom;
I shall walk no more amid trial and gloom;
I shall bid farewell to the withering tomb;
I shall deck my brow with the conqueror's plume.
Beautiful city! Beautiful city!
Let us enter in a crown to win!
Our words but half tell of the glory within.

Oh, what a day will that be when each man shall be seen to be what he really is! The one reason why they will be so distinct will be because they will be so ripe. "Thrust in thy sickle, for the time has come for thee to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe." Every saint will be ripe when Christ comes. All his own will be ripe. The little babes that died almost before they had lived, and the grey-headed men who fell asleep in Jesus, will all be ripe. We are unripe now. We are green corn as yet. Some of you, by God's grace, are beginning to think very little of yourselves, and you are getting ripe; but many are holding up their heads, and thinking they are wonderfully perfect. They are the greenest of all the wheat.

They want a long time to get that nonsense out of them before they get ripe at all; but when the Lord comes they will all be ripe, and the majesty of Christ seen in them all. Oh, may we be amongst the ripe wheat! God grant we may!

And they were easily reaped. All that was wanted was for the great Reaper to thrust in his sickle, and as soon as ever he had done so, the harvest was reaped. Now, I want to draw your attention to one fact, which is, I think, the great point in this vision. He that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped. See, then, who the Reaper is: it is a crowned one. He that cometh on the throne of cloud, it is he that reaps his wheat. Oh, what a glory is this! It is not trusted to angels. The vintage is done by angels, but the gathering of the elect is left to the hand of him that bought them with his hand nailed to the tree.

It is delightful to think that when we, who have loved him below, are like grain ready to be gathered into his Father's garner, he will not delegate the work to Gabriel or Michael, but he himself, bending from that throne of light, will take the golden sickle and reap his own, and take them like sheaves that are his own reward into his own bosom, and rejoice in it. You shall be forever with the Lord, and your dealings not with the Lord of justice, but with the Lord of love, your Savior who hath redeemed you unto himself forever. He it was that thrust in the sickle, and the harvest was reaped. Search yourselves to-night. Judge yourselves whether ye be wheat of his sowing, whether ye have believed in him, whether his grace has visited your souls, for if so, well shall it be with you in that great harvest day; but if not, beware and tremble.

III. The vintage comes last, and here is the description of it:—

"And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud voice to him that had the sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God."

I would speak with great solemnity, and use not a single metaphor beyond the tenor of the Word of God. Observe that this comes last. Here is the close of all. Christ has done his loved work—his favorite work of gathering his own; and now comes up this strange work of his, which nevertheless must be done, for God is just. His very love demands justice. He were not love if he allowed sin to go unpunished, and the rejection of his sovereign grace to be treated as though it were a trifle. So it comes at last. You may go on sinning the next twenty or thirty, and some of you perchance fifty years, if God in his long-suffering bear with you, but it will come at last. As surely as you live it will come at last, and you will hear the trumpet sound, and these are the sounds you will hear:—

"Come to judgment, come to judgment,
Come away."

. . . Observe that the crowned one did not reap the vintage, but there is an angel appointed with a sharp sickle to do it, and he is bidden to do it by another angel which had power over fire. A terrible suggestion here—the angel of wrath: that angel that smote the host of Sennacherib; that angel that went through the land of Egypt at the dead of night, and left the first-born slain in every house; that angel that pulled up the sluice of Almighty wrath, and let the fiery flood fall on Sodom and Gomorrah—the angel that hath power over fire, makes his appearance.

Oh, transgressors! it is no pleasure of mine to bring you to confront what this may mean; but I do ask you to confront it. Not the angel of mercy, not the angel of love, but the angel that hath power over fire, shall then come to the front, and demand, in the name of justice, that you who are the wild grapes of the earth shall be gathered and cast into the winepress of the wrath of God.

You observe there is no difficulty in discovering who they are. They are readily seen; and so you that come to chapel and to the church, and yet have rotten hearts, will be found out then. You that have been baptized, and perhaps have come to the communion table, and yet have not loved the Lord, will be found out then. There will be no difficulty about it. If your hearts were not right before the living God, you will be discovered to be clusters of the vine of the earth, and the vintage will take place for you. These are reaped by the angel, as I have said, not reaped by the great King himself, and when reaped they are cast into the great wine-press of the wrath of God.

Can you see the clusters being thrown in? can you see the angelic reapers hurling them, cluster after cluster, into that great and terrible wine-press, and can you see the result? I will read it: "And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

Crushed every one, not a whole cluster or berry left—crushed beneath divine justice. So dreadful is the doom that the figure is all too forcible of itself. It needs no words to impress it upon you. Imagination has been the guide of some men when they have tried to explain these furlongs, and all that; but it means that God has fought his last and dreadful battle. "Ah!" said he, "I will ease me of mine adversaries." "Beware, ye that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you."

These are his own words; and what have I to do but—now that I have spoken them, not to my pleasure, but to my heart's breaking while I speak—what have I to do but say, escape from all this? See to it that ye never come to know by actual experience the meaning of these dreadful symbols. See to it, men and women, that none of you be found amongst the clusters of the vine of the earth. You will be, except you be renewed in heart, and the blood of Jesus Christ shall cleanse you.

I trust that many of you have already believed on Jesus to the saving of your souls. If so, bow with solemn reverence before the throne of justice, and expect his advent; but if you have never believed in Jesus, "Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way while his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Oh, that to-night you would seek his face, whose wrath you cannot bear. While he stands with the silver sceptre outstretched, kiss and bow before it ere he puts that sceptre away, and takes the rod of iron with which he shall break the nations as if they were but potter's vessels.

They that will not have Christ as the Lamb, shall know him as the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Bow before him. Oh, that he would help you so to do by his divine Spirit! We shall praise and you shall have salvation. Amen and amen.—The Christian Herald.

"THE NIGHT IS FAR SPENT."

The day of the restitution spoken of by the prophets ever since the world began is at hand (Acts 3: 21)—when the Lord shall return to restore all things, and make them new—when the redeemed earth shall be once for all, far more glorious and grand than the created world ever was—when the sunshine of God's presence shall again illumine the earth, and he shall reign, not as Adam in Eden only, but throughout the whole world—when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and the Lord, as King on his throne of glory, shall reign triumphantly supreme over a ransomed and restored world. This is a day which does not come into the thoughts of multitudes of believers; they are quite unconscious of its rapid approach, and therefore they are not expecting or looking for it.

When our blessed Lord was on earth, according to Roman custom, the night was divided into four watches, between sunset and sunrise, of the duration of three hours each. So there are four dispensations, or times in the night, of which we are speaking—the Adamic time, which was from Adam to Noah; the Patriarchal, from Noah to Moses; the Levitical, from Moses to Christ; and the Christian, from Christ in meekness to the same Christ in manifested glory.

In the first three hours of the night, the light which had been, gradually dies away; so it was from the day of Adam, the light gradually died away until the earth was filled with violence. Again, in the last three hours of the night—from three to six in the morning—the dawn is breaking more and more, and the light, which increasingly prevails, is from the sun, which is coming to its rising. So it is now; the light we have is from Christ, and as the time approaches, and the sands of time go on sinking, the dawn of the heaven of glory breaks upon us, and the fair sweet morn awakes;—but not to those who are asleep.

It is not the case that multitudes are asleep even among believers? They know not it is the night-time; they overlook the fact of the curse which is on the fair creation of God; they consider not the dispensational time; like some worldlings, they, in a spiritual way, turn night into day, and expect and do in the night what the Scriptures only promise for the day-time. Surely it is "high time" to awake and ascertain what is the time—how that really and truly it is a long way on toward morning.

There are two very manifest signs by which the approach of day is marked in nature—the increase of light, and the songs of the birds. Now it is easy to note these signs in a spiritual sense. It may be asked, Was there ever a period in the Church's history when there was more gospel light, and light more widely spread, than at the present time? Were there ever more Bibles, more preachers, more clear and plain statements of the truth? We live in an age of great light and privilege.

Then as to the songs; was there ever a time when there was more thanksgiving and praise to God resounding throughout the world? Waves upon waves of praise are breaking ceaselessly on the shore at the foot of the throne of God, and he is worthy. There is no end of hymn-books, and praise-meetings, and services of song, and the song of thanksgiving and deliverance is now in thousands of places where death and destruction prevailed. What is this but the harbinger of the morning? The birds do not sing to bring up the sun, but because it is coming; and so we sing because our light is coming in increasing glory.

A vessel was once bearing her living freight along to the place of destination. Among many passengers she had one who was manacled and fettered, and going to be delivered up to the officers of justice for trial. He did not rejoice in the thought of nearing that shore; he could not refrain from looking over his shoulder hurriedly, to see how near it was. It was very near, and there was an ominous, dark-looking conveyance awaiting him. There was no hope in him, it was all dread and conscious foreboding; he was to be tried, and he knew beforehand what the sentence would be.

Another sat on the deck of the vessel, quietly perusing a newspaper. He was so taken up with the things of this world—its money-market and its frivolities, its pleasures and crimes, accidents and offences—that he was not aware that the vessel was nearing the shore, and did not seem to care whether she did so or not; perhaps, if anything, he had rather she did not, if the paper was deeply interesting. And so it is with too many who allow themselves to be carried along the stream of time, without any hope; and too dead, or asleep, or indifferent, to have any fears.

Another passenger there was who had long been straining his eyes to see the looked for shore; and as it began to appear, he might have been observed going further and further forward, until now he is seen at the very bows of the vessel, looking with eager eyes upon the concourse on the shore. Anon he recognizes some loved one, and is recognized; he knows and feels he is, and waves his hand; his countenance beams with joyful anticipation of meeting those who had gone before. This is just the picture of the christian's hope; but the reality is even beyond this, for the christian is bidden to look for more than arriving at the glorious shore, he is commanded to look for the Lord himself from heaven, "the chief among ten thousand, the altogether lovely," the central object of hope. How is it with you? Are you awake to this scene, or asleep?

Beyond all doubt, it must be admitted that we live in times when events seem to come upon one another with accumulated force. Now it seems as if it were impossible to stop; we must go on with the age, and the rush of circumstances, and in the progress to no one knows whither. Already men's hearts begin to fail with fear, for looking at the things which are coming upon the earth. But in the midst of all the hurry and rush, the christian at least can stand unmoved. He is with his Lord, and his Lord with him; midst burning worlds he will still stand lifting up his head, safe in the keeping of him who has all power in heaven and on earth; he need not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be cast into the depth of the sea.—Rev. W. Haslam, M. A., of London, Eng. —Messiah's Herald.

LOWERING THE STANDARD.

It is lamentable to contemplate the tendency to lower the standard of christian experience. This prevails with reference to all forms and grades of experience, but specially so in regard to the early stages of christian life. Repentance is almost entirely ignored. There is not usually that solemn, deep conviction of the great evil of sin that should be wrought in us. So numerous are the palliations and apologies for sin, that some begin to doubt whether it is indeed as great an evil as represented. Those christians who contend sin may sometimes be needed to effect in us humility, induce the conviction that, after all, sin is but a mere infirmity, and one indeed that may be turned to good account. But the true Scriptural idea is, it is a great and fearful wrong, to be repented of and forever abandoned. This inclination to overlook the great evil of sin is followed by a corresponding underestimate of the true character of the work of conversion. The prevalent error of the times is just here. If by any means the churches could be led to a just appreciation of the work of regeneration, a wonderful reformation would follow.

It is a common idea that conversion means merely or mainly a change of opinion and purpose, and a corresponding change of external life; whereas it is a gloriously thorough and radical work, wrought in us and for us by the power of the Holy Ghost. It is not only preceded by genuine hearty repentance, but involves and includes justification, regeneration, adoption, and the witness of the Spirit. This work is attended by such manifestations that it is made obvious, not only to the man himself, but to all others around him. It is not only felt in his heart, but is also developed in his conduct. It is clear that the man is saved because of what he is and what he does. Such conversions, whenever they occur, produce good fruit, and glorify God. Oh! for a revival of old-fashioned notions about being converted.—Selected.

PRAYER.—Literally, prayer is supplication; it is asking. By asking is meant, not simply desire expressed, but paramount desire. There must be a desire for the thing asked, greater than for anything else that would be incompatible with it. This is prayer, and nothing else is. If a man may have either an estate or so much money for the asking, but cannot have both, however much he may desire the estate, he cannot really ask for it unless he desires it more than the money. And so, whatever desire a man may have of heaven, or of the presence with him of the Spirit of God, yet if he has a stronger desire for any form of worldly good, any form of expression that he might use in the guise of prayer would not be asking. It would be hypocrisy to the omniscient eye. It is a paramount desire presented to God with the submission becoming a creature, that is prayer.—Hopkins.

LIKE a morning dawn, life becomes more and more bright the longer we live, and the reason of everything becomes more clear. What puzzled us before, seems less mysterious, and the crooked paths look straighter as we approach the end.—Richter.

A PROPHETIC ECHO.

It is purely a religious war, originating in the religious differences of the two principle classes of the subjects of the king of the north. The Turks, represented by the Sultan, have become fearfully infuriated against the Christians under the Porte's government, and by their oppressions and intolerable insults did produce the rebellions resulting in this Eastern war. The most exciting items of war news have been those detailing the horrible atrocities of the Turks in the cold blooded butcheries of Christians. The Turkish soldiers were perfectly furious in their massacres, which has excited a deeper-toned and more wide-spread indignation, among all classes, than anything that has transpired for a hundred years. The Porte has attempted to appease this wrath by representing to the nations that it was not responsible for these atrocities, because the "fury" of his subjects against Christians was so great that the government could not restrain it.

The next exciting item of news in all this war has been the wanton and diabolical destruction of property. The Turkish soldiers have been furnished with large quantities of kerosene, to assist in burning villages, mills, fences,—everything combustible belonging to the Christians. A striking fulfilment of the prediction—"He shall go forth with great fury to destroy."

Following these startling reports comes the tidings, exactly in prophetic order, of the shocking and barbarous butchery of defenceless women and children;—tortured as by fiends incarnate; delicate females driven away from friends and homes before a beastly soldiery, to be violated and finally slaughtered with the most shocking tortures.

Such destruction and butchery, it seems to us, exactly fills the prophetic mould, in kind, if not in degree. We anticipate an enlargement of these fearful deeds—a final desperate onslaught by the maddened Turks, the report of which will make all ears tingle, and fully arouse the spirit of revenge in all hearts, when the clarion shall sound for the last great battle.

The prophet's eye still follows the enraged king as he breathes out his withering anathemas upon those he reckons as accursed of God. He lights up the heavens with the flames of destruction, and rends them with the war cry, mingled with heart-rending wailings of the tortured and dying. But the tables will be turned upon him, and victory will be changed to defeat and eternal overthrow.

He closes the dark history of this national tragedy thus: "He shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." Newton expressed the sentiments of many learned expositors in relation to this passage when he said—"Between the seas in the glorious holy mountain must denote, as we have shown, some part of the Holy Land. There the Turk shall encamp with all his power, yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him, shall help him effectually, or deliver him." He continues his comments, and says, "At that time [when the Turk comes to his end] there shall be great tribulation, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and after that shall be the general resurrection."

There are two emphatic points made in this passage: first, the location of the Turkish power when it shall meet its foretold fate; and, second, it will have no helpers in its fianal struggle; or, as Newton says, "None shall help him effectually or deliver him."

In view of the first statement it is quite remarkable that there is only one government in Europe about which statesmen have discussed the question of its removal from Europe into Asia, or Palestine, and that is Turkey. In fact the first item in the Eastern Question over which the nations contend, and about which there is the most strife, is, Shall the integrity and independence of the Turkish dominions in Europe be maintained? In other words, shall Russia be permitted to drive the Turks out of Europe and plant her standard at Constantinople? These circumstances certainly indicate a progression towards a fulfilment of the prediction.

It is a well known fact that Russia professes to have a divine claim to the dominions of the old Greek emperors, including the Eastern capital of Rome—Constantinople. Their claim is founded upon two facts; and these are, first, that the Greek religion, now nationalized only in Russia, was for a number of centuries the established religion of the Greek Empire, and Constantinople was consecrated as its capital, where stood its national altar. The argument is that God gave that city and land to that church forever, as the only church he accepts upon the earth. They claim that the Turks are wicked, infidel intruders at their holy city, and that God has made it their sacred duty to drive them out and establish the high altar of Christ again within its consecrated walls.

The Czar evidently alluded to this in his recent speech at Moscow, when he said to the Russians, "If you will follow me we will accomplish our holy mission." Second, they claim that the divine right of imperial sovereignty, possessed by the Greek dynasty, was legitimately united to the Russian dynasty as follows: When the Turks took Constantinople, in 1453, they ordered the assassination of all the imperial family, so that no heir of the throne should survive. The Emperor Constantine Palæologus—fell in battle, and eventually it was supposed that all the heirs of the throne had fallen. But it was ascertained by the Russian Court that Sophia, a niece of the emperor, survived the slaughter; and her hand was sought to be given in marriage to Ivan, the heir to the Russian throne, so that her royal inheritance might be possessed by the kingly dynasty of Russia. This marriage was celebrated in the year A. D., 1492. See Putnam's Dictionary of Dates.

Since that time it has been the settled policy of Russia to regain the lost possessions, and this object is made to them a religious one; and all the members of the Greek church are taught to pray and sacrifice for it.

The restoration of Constantinople, as the Jerusalem of Christianity, is, to them, a most sacred duty. If Russia should succeed in accomplishing her purpose of driving the Turks back across the Bosphorus, it is reasonable to suppose that he would attempt to rally the millions of his faithful Moslems in the vicinity of Palestine, and make one more desperate effort for existence. This would naturally produce one grand religious struggle; and all the great classes of worshipers, depending upon the sword for protection, would rush to gain the supreme rulership of the world. This would be exactly what is described as "the battle of God Almighty."

In the present war movement in the East everything seems to be moving in this prophetic channel. There is one more feature of the subject which must be developed in connection with those we have noticed, before the end can come; viz., He (the Turkish government) "shall come to his end and none shall help him." Help for the Turk is made an emphatic item in the inspired history; and, therefore, must be made so in its fulfilment. We learn from the prophecy that when the struggle of the Turkish government shall come, it will look for and depend upon foreign "help" to sustain itself against its foes from the "north" and "east"—Russia and Persia. Just such circumstances exist to-day.

It is a point well established in history that the Sultan's government has been continued in existence for more than a hundred years by help from some of the Great Powers.

In 1799, when Turkey was threatened by France, England and Russia helped the Sultan, and thus the government survived. In 1853 the Porte was again severely pressed by Russia and Persia, and would no doubt have been driven out of Constantinople if it had not received prompt and efficient help from France and England. Now, when the Greek Church in Turkey and Russia is universally aroused with the tyranny and cold blooded butchery by the Turks, so that Russia and Persia again are putting themselves on the war path for the Byzantium palace, the all exciting question is Will England or any other power "HELP" the Porte through this peril?

It is known to all that the most emphatic question connected with the Eastern war, from its commencement, has been "Will England effectually help the Turks, so that they may be able to maintain the integrity and independence of their government in Europe? All eyes are now turned to England as the only power to whom they can look for help. The Tory cabinet first decided to help the Sultan against Russia, but when the English people learned how barbarously the Christians in Turkey had been treated by the Mohammedans, they demanded of the government that no more English blood or gold should be spent in helping sustain the abominable despotism of the Moslems.

The Marquis of Bath we think expressed the sentiment of the nation upon this subject when he said "The voice of England has declared that it shall be rendered impossible for such enormities to occur again. It is not interference on the part of England that is wanted, but non-interference. England has but to withdraw its support from Turkey, and then Russia will deal with the question, and free its kindred Slavonic races from Turkish despotism. If the alternative lies between leaving Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria to Russia or to the mercy of the Turks, then let Russia have them, and God be with her."

The London Times adds its testimony thus: "The kind of support that has been given by England to Turkey since the Crimean war is abominable, and our Liberal Ministers have been greatly to blame, for they, as well as the Tories, contributed to the mischief."

The Tory government, influenced by such outspoken sentiments, did vote that it would not go to war with Russia for the support of Turkey, but only to defend its own national interests.

All these things prove that the special point made in the prophecy, that the king of the north would fail to receive help in his last struggle is exactly the point of special interest connected with Turkey's present position. All people talk and feel that if Russia now makes war on Turkey, and the Sultan receives no "help" from England, the Cross will drive the Crescent out of Europe. If the meaning of the expression "None shall help him" is what Mr. Newton suggests—"none shall help him effectually or deliver him"—then, if England should make war on Russia in favor of Turkey, the evidence of the application of the passage to the present movement would not be invalidated, but we might still look with prophetic assurance for the "northern army" to drive the infidel intruders into the holy mountains.

It seems to us that the declarations of the prophets were never more perfectly echoed in the announcement of facts that have been the predictions we have quoted, and the statements of the circumstances connected with the present Eastern war.

If this movement does not result in the last battle, we believe another one, very similar to the present, must introduce it. God has spoken, and his Word cannot return to him void. He has mapped the field of blood, and the foreshadowed millions must drink the fatal cup. When the hour of doom shall strike, the angels will be powerless to longer hold the winds. The waiting church already sees the morning star ascending, and the increasing light of coming day reflects from the hills of Paradise.

From the unbeliever's standpoint, a dark cloud spreads its gloom over the earth; but to the eye of faith there is a heavenly radiance streaming through the darkness, bidding hope rejoice in the prospect of eternal sunshine. Beyond the night is day. Beyond the battle, peace.

ANOTHER IMPOSTER.

A man calling himself a converted Catholic Priest, known by the title of Father Francis, who has called at our office and attended some of our meetings, representing himself as a convert to some of our views, has finally turned up in Portland, Me., where, we are informed, he stated that he was well acquainted with Bro. H. L. Hastings and wife, and was a contributor to the Christian over the signatnre of H. Irving. Bro. Hastings writes us that he never saw him, and that he never wrote a line for the Christian. These facts, with many others we have heard, cause us to believe it our duty to warn our brethren against receiving him in christian fellowshsip.—ED.

BRONCHIAL DIFFICULTY.

We are happy to say to our friends that our bronchial difficulty is much relieved. We still feel a necessity for caution in preaching in the evening air. We feel thankful to our Heavenly Father for the relief experienced, because it is a glorious privilege to preach the gospel of Christ. We are satisfied the best remedy which we have used is Colton's Cough Candy, prepared by Bro. S. B. Colton, Bloomfield, Conn., and we have no hesitation in recommending it to those similarly afflicted.

THE EASTERN WAR NEWS.

The news of the week from the East has been quite indefinite, some reports expressing a strong hope of peace, while others breathe only despair. We should judge from all the testimony that the thunders of war are nearing. Less confidence is expressed that the coming Conference will result in the establishment of peace. The Conference did not commence last week as we supposed, but is appointed to commence about the 8th inst. We think the Editor of the Boston Journal has expressed the present probabilities regarding the future of the war very fairly. It is as follows:

"If Russia and Turkey both stand by the positions they have taken, the only alternative is war. Turkey will refuse the demands made by Russia; Russia will proceed to occupy Turkish territory in order to enforce her requirements; and Turkey must oppose force with force. In spite of the occasional peaceful assurances which come from one quarter and another, we confess that the likelihood at present is of war rather than peace. We do not see how the Conference can adjust the claims of contestants who occupy positions diametrically opposite, and agree in nothing except their refusal to yield a point. The most that we can see reason to hope for now, is that Russia and Turkey will be left to fight it out together; that Austria and Germany will preserve neutrality, and that England will perceive the folly of interference. Only so, as it seems to us, can a general war be averted."

How significant this language—that "Russia and Turkey will be left to fight it out together," so that if Russia should subdue the Turk he would come to his end and none would help him, just as the prophet said. The Editor again says, "Only so, as it seems to us, can a general war (the four winds) be averted" (be held). If these suggestions should be realized, and Russia should attempt to occupy Constantinople after dislodging the Turks, England would unquestionably make war on Russia to prevent the occupation, which would bring the general war, or cause the four winds to blow.

PHILADELPHIA.

A series of revival meetings commenced in Philadelphia in the church on eighth street, above Noble, Nov. 5th, and are at this date (Nov. 27th) still in progress. The meetings are centrally located, in a meeting-house that will hold a thousand people. The Lord has bestowed rich blessings upon the members of the church, and sinners are daily coming to Christ for pardon. Seventeen were buried with Christ in baptism yesterday, and fourteen joined the church in the evening. The baptism was one of special interest, because of the presence of the Lord in the power of his Holy Spirit. The revival interest is rapidly increasing. Some twenty-five requested prayers in the evening, that they might be ready to meet Jesus. Members of different churches unite heartily in the work, and are receiving the truth joyfully relating to the speedy coming of Christ, the saints inheritance, and the final end of all sin and sinners. Sectarian walls are coming down with a crash in all directions. Praise the Lord. The prospect is heart-cheering. The omens are bright in favor of the early return of Jesus. There seems to be a certainty about it, that warrants his disciples to lift up their heads and rejoice, because redemption is drawing near.

I left Philadelphia for Boston this morning. Bro. I. B. Potter, who has been holding meetings in Camden, N. J., will continue the meetings in Philadelphia.

CHRIST OR CREED.

Some are converted to Christ, some to a creed, and others to the church. The last two are much alike, but differ widely from the first class. As counterfeit money resembles the genuine, so creed and church converts resemble the true ones to Christ. They may all believe alike, attend the same meeting, support the same minister, and belong to the same church, but in spirit and motive they are wide apart. The careless observer might not see any difference between the three classes, on ordinary occasions, while at other times the contrast is very well defined. Many who were truly converted to Christ, afterwards so far back slide as to partake of the creed or sectarian spirit, and push against those who may honestly differ with them in theology, or belong to another denomination. Yet those against whom they push may be converted to Christ and love him with all their heart, and stand ready to follow all the light and truth they can comprehend.

The creed convert is ready to unite with all who subscribe to his creed and to call them brethren; the sympathy of the church convert is only with his own denomination, while the one converted to Christ feels a spirit of union with all true christians.

Those who think too much of their creed or church are usually unwilling to attend any meeting but their own, or to unite in christian work with those of another creed or denomination; but when one is thoroughly converted to Christ, he is ready to co operate with every other true christian in efforts to save the perishing. While the creed or church convert will labor and sacrifice to build up those of his peculiar belief or denomination, the convert to Christ is ready to work in any place where he can be useful in his Master's vineyard.

If one is converted to the Baptist church, it is expected that his energies will be spent to advance the Baptist interests; if to the Methodist, then he must look exclusively after their welfare, and so on to the end of the denominational list; but the one who is fully united to Christ, as the centre, can work in any field where there is an open door, and feel at home with all who truly love Jesus.

There is great reason for rejoicing in the fact that sectarian walls are falling rapidly in all directions, and that the most devoted christians in every denomination are coming into the unity of the Spirit. This is a bright omen in favor of the belief in the the speedy coming of Christ. The bride is getting ready.

BULGARIA 150 YEARS AGO.

That our readers may have an idea how barbarously the Christians of Bulgaria, Servia and all the Turkish Provinces, were treated by the Moslem rulers through past ages, and may understand why they are now willing to make such sacrifices and suffer such terrible hardships for independence and religious liberty, we give a brief sketch of their history a hundred and fifty years ago, as published in the London Times:

"Writing from the Oxford and Cambridge Club a correspondent sends some extracts from letters written by Lady Mary Wortley, from Belgrade and Adrianople, more than a century and a half ago. The first is from a letter addressed to the Princess of Wales, and dated Adrianople, 1717: "I have now, Madam, finished a journey that has not been undertaken by any Christian since the time of the Greek Emperors. We crossed the deserts of Servia, almost quite overgrown with wood, though a country naturally fertile. The inhabitants are industrious, but the oppression of the peasants is so great, they are forced to abandon their tillage, all they have being a prey to the Janizaries whenever they please to seize upon it. We had a guard of five hundred of them. I was almost in tears every day to see their insolencies in the poor villages through which we passed. The wretches that had provided twenty wagons for our baggage from Belgrade hither for certain hire were all sent back without payment, some of their horses lamed, others killed, without any satisfaction made for them. The poor fellows came round the house weeping and tearing their hair in a most pitiful manner, without getting anything but drubs from the insolent soldiers. Four days' journey hence we arrived at Philippopolis, where are still some ancient christian churches and a Bishop. Several of the richest Greeks live here, but they are forced to conceal their wealth with great care, the appearance of poverty being all their security against feeling it in earnest."

In another letter the writer says: "The desert woods of Servia are the common refuge for thieves, who rob, fifty in a company, and the villages are so poor that only force could extort from them the necessary provisions. Indeed, the Janizaries had no mercy on their poverty, killing all the sheep and poultry they could find, while the wretched owners durst not put in their claim for fear of being beaten. Lambs just fallen, geese and turkeys big with eggs, all massacred without distinction. When the Bassas travel it is yet worse. Their oppressors are not content with eating all that is to be eaten belonging to the peasants; after they have crammed themselves and their numerous retinue, they have the impudence to exact what they call teeth money—a contribution for the use of their teeth, worn with doing them the service of devouring their meat." One more quotation: "At these mountains we lay at the little village of Kishci, wholly inhabited by Christians, as all the peasants of Bulgaria are. Their houses are nothing but little huts, and they leave them and fly into the mountains some months before the march of the Turkish army, who would else entirely ruin them. They are very industrious husbandmen."

ITALIAN BIG GUNS.

The Italians are preparing themselves to to be master of the Mediterranean Sea. An Armstrong gun has been made in England for the Italians, weighing one hundred tons, or two hundred thousand pounds. Another is to be made of the same size, and two iron-clad vessels to carry them, covered with twenty-two inch iron plate, and of eleven thousand tons displacement. These guns are the largest in the world. The next largest is one in England, weighing eighty tons, called the "Woolwich Infant." There is good reason to believe that a battle is approaching whose magnitude will be proportioned to these guns. The nations are becoming "angry," being stirred up by the spirits of demons, preparatory for "the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Rev. 16: 14. It is said these "spirits of devils" are to work "miracles," and "go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." In the midst of the conflict, Jesus says, "Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth." Let us be among the watchers, that we may be all ready to meet him in peace.

WASTE.—The twenty-four buildings belonging to the Board of Finance of the Centennial Exhibition were sold at auction in Philadelphia yesterday for $296,160. They cost about $2,500,000.

A shocking waste of property in the midst of hundreds of thousands of people suffering for bread, clothing and fuel. We sincerely believe that this money, with at least seventy-five millions more, and many valuable lives, was squandered for the gratification of national pride, and the unholy lust of the eye.

THE TROUBLED KING.

The sanctuary desolator, the middle king, is in trouble. The enemies in his European realm are to his friendly subjects as three to one. He is bankrupt in money. Within all is distraction, without is suspicion and hostility. Not a single world-power offers to "help him." He stands and totters alone. O it is thrilling to watch the movements to-day in the Orient. God's chariot of prophecy rolls right along. We can almost hear it roll.

On the North is the collosal Empire of Russia with more than 80,000,000 souls. On the East is Persia with 10,000,000 souls. These are exactly north and east of Turkey.

"I am determined that justice shall reign in Turkey," says the autocrat. And over more than six millions square miles of earth there is the stir of tramping armies and the fierce cry, To arms! Panic at London, panic at Vienna, panic at Berlin follows. The Turk who has been rampant and raging, now cowers in fear. Gloom settles down on the angry nations; gloom and "perplexity."

Now Russia dictates to Persia: "In obedience to Russia's demands, Persia hastens to place troops on her frontier." So says the telegraph. The fierce Moslem is likely to be between the upper and the nether millstone. The dogs of war are let slip.

Such is the news over the sea-floor. Now surely "tidings from the East and North (do) trouble" the rotten, tottering, desolator, on whom all eyes are fixed. Let men fix their eyes on God's prophecy too. Dan. 11.

Is the Moslem yet to go forth with might and main to massacre his thousands; to destroy amid his dying throes, as did Sampson, more than he destroyed in his life? All the nations fear it. Who can read the future? The nations are full of forebodings of ill.

Arise, Lord, and judge the earth! Ye who have the truth, speak it. Ye who are enlightened, let your light shine. Our king is not far away. O to be saved forever and ever.

NEW BOOKS.

"Is Eternal Punishment Endless?" By an Orthodox minister of the Gospel. Published by Lockwood, Brooks and Co., Boston. The author denies restoration, and limits future punishment. I have not seen the work.

"Watchman! What of the Night?" By Dr. John Cummings. Published by G. W. Carleton & Co., New York. Unquestionably Dr. Cumming's fresh and latest views.

"The Belief of the First Three Centuries Concerning Christ's Mission to the Underworld." By F. Huidekopper. Published by James Miller, New York. A work of much research and rare value, that until now has for many years been out of print and very scarce. This new edition will aid in discovering the views of the early church on the nature of Hades.

"Philosophy of Trinitarian Doctrine," by Rev. A. G. Pease (Congregationalist). Published by G. P. Putnam & Sons, New York. Mr. Pease teaches the doctrine of immortality alone through Jesus Christ, and the utter death of evil men. Very many clergymen endorse the volume. The view is spreading.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

AG'T.

A MONTH'S WORK IN ALABAMA AND TENNESSEE.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—I will give a few notes of the work here for the last month.

The second Sunday in October I was with Shilo Church, where the brothers and sisters were glad to see me, after my return from campmeeting. I gave up my hour of preaching for the Baptist brethren to attend a funeral, but preached two evenings. Sunday, A. M., before their hour of preaching, I baptized Bro. Richard Shattuck, formerly of Whitefield, N. H.

During the week following, Bro. S. P. Hayward, of Pepperell, Mass., came to labor with me. I believe God sent him, for he came without any prospect of help financially, and is full of the Holy Ghost and zeal for God. His first trip was in an ox wagon to Oak Grove. The third Sunday the little band met at Bro. Carlton's dwelling to hear the Word; and we enjoyed a good time.

His second tour was about seventy miles on horseback. We reached Bro. Wm. Lee's just at dark, and held meeting in his house, near Valleyhead, Friday, A. M., Oct. 20th. We next went to Spring Creek, where our Quarterly Conference was organized. We had a blessed time here. Meetings continued with interest till Tuesday, P. M., and five came for prayer. One was converted, and one baptized. We then started for home.

Wednesday, we returned to Valleyhead, and held meetings again at Bro. Wm. Lee's. Thursday, reached home again, found all well, and gave God the glory.

The fifth Sunday we held a meeting at Edgefield, and in Stevenson at night. Good audience and attention. Monday A. M., Bro. and Sr. Hayward, myself and wife, went to Carpenter, where Bro. Shattuck met us, and took us up Sand mountain, in a wagon, where we held meetings at Liberty Hall, near Bro. J. J. Smith's, till Friday, A. M., which resulted in forming a church of fourteen, and baptizing two; one of whom was Bro. Smith's last child. He has here struggled hard amid persecution and opposition, and has outlived it far enough to see a church formed, and all his children on the way to the kingdom.

Friday, at Carpenter, we parted with our wives who returned home to look after the interest there, while Bro. Hayward and I went to Bethel Church. We had good meetings, but small crowds at the church; but Sunday, P. M., at Bro. John Mitcheil's dwelling, we had a good audience, and hope good was done. We walked back to Bro. Cullars by nine P. M., having called to see Father Caleb Smith, whose extreme age is expected to end at any hour; and also, Aunt Susan Smith who was suffering much. Pray for them.

Wednesday night, at my father's, we had a good social meeting. Friday, Bro. Hayward and I rode to Shilo, and had good meetings Saturday and Sunday, as well as at Bird's Chapel in Dale Co., Ga., Saturday night. Monday, we held meeting at Bethesda Church, and hope good was done. Reached home and loved ones last night at half past eight. To-night I start for Arkansas, to tell the good news, and bear persecution for the Master.

We are struggling here to build a meeting-house. We have all the material now, but the floor and sash glass, etc. We mean to push the work, in the name of the Lord, till it is completed. If any of the family scattered abroad, have any of the Lord's funds to aid us in getting the floor, or glass, or sash, for the windows, send it on, and the receipt will be acknowledged on my return in December. The Lord will enter credit for all cheerfully given. We want no other kind of donations but those coming cheerfully. Please say it is for the church. Pray for us.

RELIGIOUS ENJOYMENT OF OLD PEOPLE.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Old christians have trials that the young and middle-aged know nothing of. As their strength fails by age or disease their minds fail in proportion, and their zeal cools, even if their faith is good. All know that people begin to fail at fifty to sixty in strength and activity physically, and about the same spiritually. I have talked with old christians about their enjoyment, and they admit they do not enjoy as much of anything as when thirty to forty years old. The fires of their soul was lower, and God knew it, and excuses them from producing their work as formerly.

Years ago I have heard old christians called old fogies and backslidden because they did not attend meeting as usual, when in fact these same old people had done more in God's cause than those denouncers ever would do. Such things are trials to old people that young ones know nothing about. Together with the infirmities of old age and loss of their former zeal and enjoyment, many have been discouraged and given up.

Old people need encouraging, and to be helped by younger ones who are strong, spiritually as well as temporally, and should not be neglected by young, strong christians. One man eighty five years old said it did him more good to have a young christian call and see him than a good sermon did. I presume many others would say the same. Take care of your fathers and mothers in Israel by letting them know they are appreciated, for little things affect them more in their old age.

Old preachers especially feel sensitive when slighted by the younger ones, as is the case now among us, as a people, than any other people in these days. I recollect in '45, when fanaticism raged to such a degree at the Windsor Lock Campmeeting, the young preachers who had rejected the old ones as not being in the spirit, as they said, found the spirit that they fostered got control of the meeting; and in one instance a wild fanatic, who pretended to discern spirits, went into the preacher's stand and laid hold of Bro. Kent, and pitched him out of the stand, and took charge of the meeting. In such cases old preachers and christians were necessary for advice. Their counsel was heeded and the cause saved from a total wreck.

I recollect an old preacher from Tolland, Ct., did more to quiet these elements than all the young preachers on the ground. If he did not have so much fiery zeal, he had good judgment, and a good anchor to hold the ship in that terrible storm.

These old facts will be interesting to my old brethren if to no others. They have done their work and have laid up something where it is safe. Do not be discouraged, my old Bro., because you do not feel that zeal and enjoyment you formerly did. It is not expected by the Lord or his reasonable people. We are in strange prophetic times, and you may be needed again for counsel, showing your faith in that way, if you do not feel like attending meeting as much as formerly. I thank the Lord for the solid principle that I feel while writing. This is as necessary as steam. Let us hold on.

HINDOOSTAN PRESENTIMENT OF THE END.

THOS. FITZSIMMONS

From late Eastern advices, it appears that the Turks themselves are filled with a presentiment and foreboding that their Empire and Koran approach their end. Bad men sometimes stumble over the truth.

But here is another testimony—from the vast Empire of India—showing a similar presentiment and foreboding among the Hindoos, of an approaching downfall of their Temple and false system,—another of the "Revolutions, mighty, and great," of the last days. The fall of Juggernaut is being widely prophesied among the Hindoos. The falling of a stone last year from the tower of the temple of Pooree produced a powerful sensation. The impression is widely spread that it betokened the end of Juggernaut, his temple and worship. Those who have examined the temple say that it must soon fall, the walls being already interlaced with the fibres and branches of the trees which, in course of time, must cause the whole structure to collapse.—Foreign Journal.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Jas. Morrison.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Jesus says, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer." The tribulation of the righteous is from paradise lost to paradise restored. The faithful martyrs of Jesus, under the fifth seal, lie conquered by death, imprisoned in the grave until this day; ceaselessly their blood crieth out, 'O! Lord, how long?" From every valley their voices ascend to the mighty God, crying, "How long?" And will not their cry be answered, backed as it is by the long continued and intense desire of those who are "still in the flesh," and who "groan being burdened, while they wait for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body? He will avenge them speedily, though he bear long with the unbelief of those who scoff at their blessed hope. This promise is often repeated in both the Old Testament and New; it is clothed in the most glowing language, and made sure by the most solemn oath.

Says Jesus, "I will come again, I will see you again. and your heart shall rejoice." The. most grand and glorious tidings ever proclaimed in the ears of mortal man is Jesus' coming again. The speedy coming of Jesus is the key-note that thrills our very souls. There is nothing like it to cheer up the poor wayworn pilgrim.

Dear Brn., I am looking, day by day, to hear that the four angels have let go the four winds of the earth, when the nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters. Isa. 17: 15. Soon the storm will rage over the earth, and Christ's footsteps will be heard treading in the wine-press of his wrath. "For the day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." We know not how soon the gathering storm will burst, and the opening heavens reveal the Son of God in all his glory. Then the sleepers shall awake from the dust of the earth to everlasting life, and we shall be changed. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

New Glasgow, P. Q., Canada.

From F. Williamson.

Dear Readers of the Crisis:—Although a stranger to many of you, nevertheless, I am on the Lord's side, and my hope and confidence is in Christ. The coming of Christ has never been preached in this section of country, and we stand all alone.

We need some one here to give the Bible a certain sound in such a way that some honest hearts might see the blessed hope and embrace it.

I cannot thank the Lord enough that I and my dear husband have been willing to accept the only hope set before mortals, that of life through a resurrection from the dead, when Jesus comes; and that many dear friends have this hope, and are trying to be ready to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb, which I believe is not far in the future.

I have not seen the Crisis for nearly a year, but trust its many readers are still profited by its teachings.

We have no church privileges here. It has been two years since we heard a sermon preached, and we often get hungry for a word from those of like precious faith. How near and dear they all seem to us. Dear ones, pray for us that we may be faithful till Jesus comes.

NICHOLS. In Philadelphia, Sept. 18th, 1876, Kate, wife of Bro. Isaac N. Nichols, aged thirty-four years.

Perhaps no one can more truthfully speak of her christian character than the writer, who for many years has been intimately associated with her in the bonds of fellowship. One of the chief traits Sister Nichols possessed was a happy and cheerful spirit, and in all the adverse circumstances of her life she ever trusted in God's faithfulness to deliver in the time of trouble. The funeral services were conducted by Elder H. T. Taylor, of Philadelphia, from the words, "She hath done what she could." He portrayed the chief characteristics of our Sister, dwelling on her devotion as a wife, that she was indeed a true help-meet for her husband, aiding him in his business and cheering him in the seasons of his despondency. He spoke of her filial obedience; her fidelity as a friend. Like the woman whom our Lord commended, she did what she could. She was suddenly called away, and now sleeps in death. Soon she will hear the trumpet's sound, and arise to realize the fruition of those joys for which she so often longed in life. K. E. A.

HASKELL. In Boston, at the Mass. General Hospital, Nov. 10th, 1872, of cancer, Capt. Elias Haskell, formerly of Newburyport, aged eighty-four years.

My father had been feeble for about a year, and in October, in compliance with his own and the physician's wish, he went to the Hospital for treatment. But the disease baffled their skill, and he fell asleep in Jesus on the day he was to have been taken home. A post mortem examination proved that his death resulted from a cancer on the kidneys. He had for many years believed in the speedy coming of Christ, but felt for the last few months that he must sleep a little while. He often dwelt on the word immortality, and often said, "living or dying, I am the Lord's." He leaves an aged widow and several children, who miss him sadly; but we sorrow not without hope, for we expect, if faithful, to meet him again when the Life-giver comes, clothed with immortality. He was taken to Newburyport for burial. Funeral services were attended by the Baptist clergyman and were comforting. L. A. JANVRIN.

BRAZEE. At Westfield, Mass., July 20th, of consumption, Elder Samuel S. Brazee, aged fifty-seven years.

Bro. Brazee had been connected with the last great message to the world since 1844. He preached the glad news among the hills and valleys of Western Mass. and Conn., until laid by with disease. Many, no doubt, will find rest with Christ as the result of his labors. He suffered much, but the hope was dear to him. He said to the writer, "I have but one desire, that is for Christ to come. He rests in hope, leaving a companion who has patiently shared with him the trials and poverty of life; also five children to mourn. May the God of all comfort sanctify the affliction to their good. Sermon by the writer, from Ps. 127: 2. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

THURSTON. In Methuen, Mass., Nov. 11th, 1876, of consumption, caused by enlargement of the heart, John O., eldest son of Nathl. K. Thurston, aged forty-three years.

Within the short period of three weeks we have thrice been called to mourn the loss of those we love; once, our own sweet babe; again, our youngest brother; and now, our eldest brother has fallen a victim to death's relentless grasp. He was a loving husband and father, an affectionate son and brother, and a much esteemed citizen, beloved by all who knew him. We long for the time to come when the great enemy will be annihilated, and the Life-giver will reign King of kings and Lord of lords. SARAH E. STEWART.

PICKERING. In Lake Village, N. H., Oct. 20th, of typhoid fever, Sister Mahitable, wife of Bro. Andrew Pickering, aged seventy-two years.

Forty-five years ago, Sister Pickering found Christ precious to a believer's heart, and became a worthy member of the F. W. B. Church. In 1842, she welcomed the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand, and continued steadfast in the faith and in the exercise of every christian virtue to the end of life. She leaves a husband and seven children, and with them an example of christian fidelity that will live in the community while time lasts. May God sanctify the bereavement to the good of our aged brother, who expects in a little while to see the companion of his youth and sharer of his toils in a blessed immortality. Funeral service by the writer. A. ROSS.

FINCH. In Lysander, N. Y., Oct. 29th, 1876, of pneumonia, Lewis Finch, aged seventy-six years.

He was a kind husband and father, a good neighbor, and a devoted christian. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Smith, Methodist minister of the place. His sermon from 1 Cor. 15th chap., was full of comfort, hope and consolation, and was fully appreciated by the relatives and friends of the deceased. "He sleeps in the blessed hope of a glorious resurrection from the dead."

> We shall meet on that bright morning,
> When life's pilgrimage is o'er;
> When Christ comes to claim his jewels,
> We shall meet to part no more.

M. R. P.

WELCH. In Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 28th, 1876, Howard Welrose, son of C. P. and Iva F. Welsh, aged nine months.

In Mineapolis, Oct. 6th, 1876, Olive Hill, wife of W. L. Sargent, aged forty-nine years.

The infant and its grandmother fell on sleep; one, ere sin had entered into its little heart; the other, with a life-record that by the power of Jesus' blood her sins were forgiven. Sr. S. was an unostentatious believer in the truths of God's Word, and a devoted christian, looking for the advent of Christ unto eternal life. Funeral discourse from Rev. 2: 3. L. F. COLE.

MORRILL. In Warner, N. H. Nov. 13th, Bro. John Morrill, aged eighty-two years.

Bro. M. has been a believer in the near coming of the Lord for about twenty years, and was faithful until age and reason failed. He leaves a faithful wife and children to mourn. May the Lord comfort and save. D. W. DAVIS.

SANBORN. In Sutton, N. H., Oct. 3d, Mrs. Emma F. Sanborn, wife of Frank I Sanborn, aged twenty-two years. D. W. DAVIS.

KEELER. In Thayers Corner, Burke, N. Y., Nov. 14th, 1876, Addie E., only child of Egbert L., and Martha Keeler, aged three years.

Thus death has robbed another home of its treasures, and another chair is vacant. The little crib and shoes are set aside, and the grave holds the jewel to-day. The welcome sound of her voice, the pattering of her little feet will no more be heard to cheer the hearts of fond parents and kind friends. But, amid their deep sorrow they are comforted with the assurance that it is well with little Addie. She will soon come again from the land of the enemy.

> "She will sleep, but not forever;
> There will be a glorious dawn.
> They will meet to part, no never,
> On the resurrection morn."

Words of comfort were spoken from Jer. 31: 15, 16, by the writer. E. N. MORSE.

SPICER. In Kendall, N. Y., Feb. 1st, 1876, Sister Lovina Spicer, relict of our late Bro. Numon Spicer, aged seventy-six years.

The parents have passed under the dominion of death in good old age, leaving three daughters, with numerous relatives and friends to mourn their loss, yet not without hope. May the grace of God bring them all to meet in the morn of the resurrection. Funeral services by the pastor of the M. E. church. Text, John 14: 4. B. P. S.

BOSHART. In Harrisburg, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1876, Jacob Boshart, aged seventy-three years.

He suffered for nine years with palsy, which rendered him quite helpless. He will be greatly missed by his family and acquaintances, for he was kind and faithful. May God sustain the aged widow and her children, who deeply feel the loss. Sermon by the writer. C. H. WILLIAMS.

CONE. At Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 14th, 1876, Elmer E. Cone, aged nineteen years.

His death was sudden and unexpected, but his trust was in the Lord. He sleeps in Jesus. His funeral was attended at Sparta by the writer. May Heaven bless the mourning parents and children. E. M'CULLOCH.

Married.

HICKS—HORTON. In Providence, R. I., Nov. 28th, 1876, by Elder A. W. Sibley, Mr. BENJAMIN F. HICKS, of Central Falls, R. I., and Miss HATTIE B. HORTON, South Attleboro, Mass.

DAVIS—PHELPS. In Wilmot, N. H., by Elder D. W. Davis, Mr. AMOS DAVIS, of Sutton, N. H., and Mrs. MARY PHELPS, of Wilmot, N. H.

FOREIGN NEWS.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 29. The following semi-official statement is published: "The marquis of Salisbury's conversations with Count Andrassy and Prince Bismarck will probably have convinced him that the three imperial courts remain unchanged, and that Russia has been hitherto restrained from taking extreme measures by the consideration which is due the Emperors of Germany and Austria. Russia will not put forward the occupation of Bulgaria as her principal demand at the Conference, but her representative will positively declare that the projected Turkish constitution cannot be discussed; that autonomy for the provinces must be guaranteed, and that occupation appears to be the best means of rendering such guarantee efficacious.

Should the other powers be willing to participate in the occupation, Russia would even now prefer such a solution; but if not, Russia, in order to obtain the objects sanctioned by the Berlin memorandum, will undertake occupation single handed. The foregoing forms the general basis of the Russian demands. If Turkey, as is reported, should reject every proposal of autonomy, the Porte would merely attend the Conference to protest against every point offered for discussion. The statement concludes by affirming that Russia is determined to maintain her position against all protests or evasions that the Porte may offer."

London, Nov. 30. The Vienna correspondent of the Times says that it is reported that the forces of the three remaining military districts of European Russia will be mobilized in December. Four of the six army corps already mobilized are concentrated in a semi-circle, from the Pruth to Abernan, ready for a march to the front.

The Times dispatch from Berlin says that five instead of three additional military districts in Russia are to be mobilized, and adds that 120,000 men to the previous estimates of the Russian forces are ready for war.

The Times Berlin correspondent says: The new Turkish Constitution is to be proclaimed on the opening of the Conference.

A leader in the Times, commenting on the new constitution and alleged ministerial crisis in connection therewith, says: "The patriotic efforts of Midhat Pacha are defeated by the Grand Vizier, who refuses to assent to the limitation of the Sultan's power.

The Grand Vizier and the Pashas about him must not be deceived. The question they have to consider is not whether the concession of the guarantees for an orderly Government in the provinces is compatible with the nature of the Sultan's powers, but whether the refusal of the guarantee is compatible with the prolongation of any of his authority."

A dispatch from Berlin says an order which is in preparation for calling out all Russians under fifty years of age is regarded as proof that the Government is preparing for all contingencies, and has depressed the St. Petersburg Bourse.

A Vienna dispatch reports that the commander of the Black Sea fleet, addressing the men at Nikolaieff, concluded with the following words: "This year you are destined to fight against the enemies of our religion. Remember the sailors of the Black Sea gained glory at Sebastopol."

Paris, Nov. 28. The Chamber of Deputies last night by 263 to 239, rejected a vote, which was supported by M. Dufaure, President of the Council and Minister of Justice and Worship, for an increase of priests' stipends. It is expected that the Chamber will to-day reject the grant which Dufaure urgently demands for clerical scholarships. These differences are thought to be important in connection with a threatened ministerial crisis.

THE Chicago school census just completed, gives the city 407,661 inhabitants.

A CARD.

To those who may feel an anxiety to know the present state of my health, and my present prospects for labor, I take this means of saying that I am very much better, have had no cough for two months past, but still have joint racking rheumatism, but am better in that respect, yet have constant and painful soreness of my chest, so that wearisome nights are appointed to me. If I can avoid taking severe colds, be entirely sheltered and protected from the chilling, tedious storms of a Canadian winter, have rest and quiet until warm weather, by the blessing of God, and his permission, I hope to be able to resume my humble labor in the gospel field. I cannot expect more. A heavenly country is near where no inhabitant shall say I am sick. The weary shall find rest. I hope for that better country. Pray for me. C. P. DOW.

Magog, P. Q., Nov. 27th.

Attention All, Please!

I have a proposal to make. Who will help in this matter? Several important facts have come to my knowledge, which leads me to make the following offer. With gratitude to God I learn that the "History of the Second Advent Message" has been put into several college and seminary libraries, where the results are clearly manifest in awakening some of the "faculty" and students to investigate and become especially interested in the doctrine of Christ's coming and kindred truths. They express surprise that such an amount of mission work has been done in this form, and such men of known ability and piety engaged in it while they were ignorant of it. It has also fallen into the hands of several ministers of different churches, where the results are the same. I am convinced that much good can be done by awakening such men as stand in the front of society. I want to sacrifice some to help it along. It is now the special season to make gifts to friends for two months to come. The retail price of the History is $3.50. Postage is now 20 cts. on each. The actual cost of the book to me in publishing was $3.00 each. I now offer one hundred copies of it to be ordered before Jan. 1st, 1877, to any persons who will order to give to libraries of Institutions, or other public libraries, or who will keep them to lend to ministers and other readers, or who will give them to ministers, for $2 50 each, postpaid. No others should expect them at this price, as it is 70 cts. less than cost on each. Address all such orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Notices.

VERMONT QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.—The next session of the Vermont Conference will be holden at St. Johnsbury, commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 12th, and continue as long as the Lord will. Pray, brethren, and sacrifice to come and work for sinners. Come from afar, and heaven will bless you. A. A. HOYT, Conf. Elder.

VERMONTERS, READ.—More labor is demanded in the mission fields in this State than we have funds to pay the expenses of. There are back pledges unpaid, some of which have been standing some time. These should be paid, as they are much needed. Send on at once, and save us the expense of visiting you personally to collect these pledges. There are flattering fields opening for building up churches, and we hope the brethren of this State will not let the work drag heavily for want of funds. Let the laity sacrifice with the preachers and the work will prosper. Send to me at Morrisville, Vt., or to J. T. Edson, East Roxbury, Vt. A. A. HOYT, 1st Elder.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—If the Lord will, a Protracted Meeting will be held in the meeting-house at Upper Bartlett, N. H., Wednesday evening, Dec. 13th, and over Sunday, Dec. 17th. Bro. J. B. Deering will be with us to assist in proclaiming the Word. A cordial invitation is extended to all the waiting ones in this locality. E. S. MOULTON, Committee.

NOTICE.—An adjourned meeting of the R. I. and East Conn. A. C. Conference will be held with the A. C. Church at Natick, R. I., commencing Wednesday, at two oclock P. M., Dec. 6th, and holding over the 8th. It is desired that every church will send its delegates and minister, as the new Constitution will be brought up for consideration, with other business of importance. All wishing copies of the proposed new Constitution can obtain them by addressing N. A. Angell, North Scituate, R. I. N. A. ANGELL, Conference Clerk.

NOTICE.—An adjourned session of the Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec will convene at Magog, P. Q., Thursday, at 10½ A. M., Jan. 4th, 1877, for the transaction of the following business: 1. To adopt an amended form of its Constitution, as voted at the last session, and published in the Crisis of Oct. 14th, 1876. 2. To elect a full board of officers. 3. To take a deed of the Lake View camp-ground, as already arranged. 4. To appoint a Campmeeting Committee. 5. To elect a delegate, or delegates, for the next August Convention of the A. C. Association, to be held in Chelsea, Mass. 6. Miscellaneous business. We hope for a full attendance of all interested, all members of the Conference especially; and all others who can unite upon the basis proposed.

Dear brethren, united we stand, divided we fall. Let us make this meeting a meeting of prayer. Northern Vermont and New Hampshire can unite with us if they think best. C. P. DOW. E. C. ORCUTT.

NOTICE.—To those who have written to me, and others, I would say, that I have arranged with the Scitico Church to be absent on the 10th, 24th and 31st of Dec. Will willingly tarry longer than the Sabbath if the interest and duty demands further effort. My address is Box 43, Scitico, Ct. H. C. SMITH, Pastor A. C. Church, Scitico, Ct.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference at East Washburn, Me, commencing Friday, Dec. 29th, and continuing over the Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all, both ministers and people, to come and labor for the upbuilding of the church of Christ and the salvation of sinners. E. I. CROUSE, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held in Richmond (Reed meeting-house) evening, Dec. 28th. The preaching brethren belonging to Conference are especially requested to attend. Let all come filled with the Spirit, and labor for salvation. Will Brn. Baker and Hall come? H. D. REED.

NOTICE.—There will be a meeting at Dorchester, N. H., the Lord will, commencing Dec. 14th, six o'clock P. M., to continue over Sunday, the 17th. Brn. George E. Brown, George M. Little, and others, are expected to be with us to preach the Word. J. B. S. PILLSBURY, for the church.

NOTICE.—There will be a Protracted Meeting of the A. C. Church, held with the Salt Creek Church, at the Little school-house in Republic Co., Kansas, commencing Dec. 28th, and holding over two Sundays. The North Western Quarterly Conference of Kansas will meet some time during the meeting at the call of the President. Eld. J. C. Smith, the State Evangelist, is expected to be present. Everybody is cordially invited to attend, and all ministering brethren are requested to be present to help preach the Word. THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Sec. of the N. W. Quar. Conf. of Kansas.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The Fifth Quarterly Meeting of the N. E. Advent Christian Conference of Iowa will be held with the church at Sac City, Sac County, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and hold over the Lord's day. P. W. HOUGH.

NOTICE.—At the last annual meeting of the Vermont Conference, a resolution was passed to encourage the churches to take up collections once in four weeks to aid the State Missionary work. Let this work be attended to. H. B. QUIMBY, Recorder.

NOTICE.—The Second Annual session of the York County A. C. Conference will be held in the Second Advent Chapel at Biddeford, Me., commencing Thursday, Dec. 7th, at two o'clock P. M. A full attendance is desired. C. H. SWEET, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Lord will, there will be a Protracted Meeting at Dixville, P. Q., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 7th, and hold over Sunday, Dec. 10th. U. G. LADD. JOHN MAGOON.

NOTICE.—I would say to those churches who have requested me to preach for them, that I am now at liberty to do so, as the Lord may open the way. Address me at 61 Bellevue Avenue, Providence, R. I. A. W. SIBLEY.

NOTICE.—Is there a good Sister among the readers of the Crisis that is poor and would like a home this winter, and can do plain cooking and housework generally for a small compensation beside board? If so, she can find a home with us. My wife has been sick some seven or eight months, and needs some one that can take charge of the work and relieve her of care. For reference inquire of Eld. E. Bellows, East Killingly, Conn.; Eld. H. Munger, Chicopee Falls, Mass.; Eld. E. Card, Natick, R. I.; or H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass. If there is such a one they can address me at Apponaug, R. I. JAMES B. WAITE.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and endurance. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per one hundred, or 15 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are anxious, perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of the nations. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 30 cts. per dozen, by mail.

Address I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

☞ For sale as above at the Crisis Office.

"TRUTH AND ERROR CONTRASTED."

Being a Review of a Series of Sermons delivered by Eld. R. Newton, D. D., near Stevenson, Ala., against the views of the people known as Advent Christians.

BY ELDER J. A. CARGILE.

We have just published a neat edition of the above in pamphlet form, adding to the Review "Man in Death," by Edmund Law, D. D., late Lord Bishop of Carlisle, Eng., a very valuable work written one hundred years ago.

Also Extracts from fifty eminent writers, ancient and modern, who teach that immortality is a gift through Christ. This is a grand work to circulate everywhere.

For sale by J. A. Cargile, Stevenson, Ala., or I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me. Price 10 cents postpaid. Sold also at the World's Crisis Office.

Appointments.

☞ APPOINTMENTS MUST BE RECEIVED AS EARLY AS TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following RESOLUTION was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"RESOLVED, That no appointments be published in the CRISIS henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given."

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"RESOLVED, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass.

At Reduced Prices.

Having a considerable number of Bible Echo volumes, and monthly parts on hand, also of Signs of the Times, we desire the co-operation of our readers to distribute them where they will be doing good; and to induce them so to do, we offer them at the following very reduced rates—in many instances at less than half price. They are good reading.

BIBLE ECHO parts, old series. Have been selling at 25 cts, reduced to 10 cts, and 2 cts. postage.

BIBLE ECHO, July monthly part, sample number of present issue. Reduced to 10 cts., 2 cts. postage.

BIBLE ECHO, Vol. I., reduced to $2.75. Vol. 2 to $1.75. Vol. 3 to $1.25. A neat looking volume as well as entertaining reading matter.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Back parts of Monthly Magazine, edited by Rev. M. Baxter. Reduced to 5 cts. per number.

Also the following books and photographs:

HOMES OF OLD ENGLISH WRITERS. A handsome book; a pretty present. Reduced to 85 cts., and 5 cts. postage.

NEW FACTS UPON ALL SUBJECTS. Useful to persons of all trades and professions; also to housewives. Reduced to 60 cts; postage 5 cts. It is hoped that this reduction will secure a clearance of these two standard works of general literature.

PHOTOGRAPH OF S. MINTON, M. A., an able English writer and advocate of the truth of Immortality only in Christ. Reduced to 15 cts.

PHOTOGRAPH OF H. CONSTABLE, M. A., also a talented work on the same vital theme, well known and generally approved by the Advent body. Reduced to 15 cts.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

An answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a book of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It is having a wide circulation. We have just received a quantity of the pamphlet edition, and can now fill orders at the following prices: Pamphlet, 25 cts. per copy; $2.25 per dozen by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Bound in cloth, 30 cts. per copy by mail; $3.00 per dozen by express. AG'T.

"THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED:

OR,

AN EXPOSITION OF THE WOMAN AND THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST

In the 17th Chapter of Revelation.

SHOWING WE ARE NEAR THE END OF THE PRESENT DISPENSATION."

BY MILES GRANT.

This valuable and interesting tract is now ready, and for sale at this Office. Price by mail, single copy, 8 cts; four copies for 25 cts.; per dozen, 75 cts. AG'T.

ONLY A WOMAN.

Only a woman, shrivelled and old,
The prey of the winds and the prey of the cold,
Cheeks that are shrunken,
Eyes that are sunken,
Lips that were never o'er-bold;
Only a woman, forsaken and poor,
Asking an alms at the bronze church-door.

Hark to the organ! roll upon roll
The waves of its music go over the soul!
Silks rustle past her
Thicker and faster;
The great bell ceases its toll.
Fain would she enter, but not for the poor
Swingeth wide open the bronze church-door.

Only a woman, waiting alone,
Icily cold on an ice-cold throne:
What do they care for her,
Mumbling a prayer for her,
Giving not bread, but a stone?
Under gold laces their haughty hearts beat,
Mocking the woes of their kin in the street.

Only a woman! In the older days
Hope carolled to her happiest lays;
Somebody missed her,
Somebody kissed her,
Somebody crowned her with praise;
Somebody faced up the battles of life,
Strong for her sake who was mother or wife.

Somebody lies with a tress of her hair
Light on his heart where the death shadows are;
Somebody waits for her,
Opening the gates for her,
Giving delight for despair.
Only a woman—nevermore poor—
Dead in the snow at the bronze church-door.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

WM. KELLAWAY.

THE TURCO-SERVIAN WAR.

We have returned home to find the country in an awful condition, foreboding the most terrible scenes. For many long months the host of dailies which abound in the land have been printing column after column of war news, and not infrequently a coup has been expected, such as would drag England into a fearful and bloody contest with the ambitious and haughty Russias. But it has not come to this pass as yet, thanks be to God. And it seems that there is to be a lull at least for a few weeks; for Turkey has signed a document of armistice for two months. England, however, has not failed to take every possible precaution, sending a fleet up the Mediterranean to be ready to obey orders, and operate with Turkey against Russia, in case the Muscovite should march an army on to the soil of the Osmanli for purposes of self-aggrandisement. But no one expects there is to be a settled and permanent peace. England regards this act of diplomacy on the part of Russia, as but a move giving her time to amass her army and prepare for one of the greatest butcheries of modern times. Soldiers have been marched from St. Petersburg, the generals of the Russian army have been ordered to their respective commands, instruments and munitions of war have been and are preparing at the speediest rate, and the reserves are to put in an appearance in December; and the public instinct finds in all this the presage of garments rolled in blood, the whirl of bullets, the smoke of battle. Three millions of men getting ready for the field! Think of it. Who, that within a few weeks may be concerned in the affray, may have to stand before a considerable fraction of this fierce host—could look on unconcerned? And England realizes the gravity of the situation, and rejoices with but a faint joy over the armistice just concluded; for the news from Vienna and Paris is that Russia intends to exact from triumphant Turkey preposterous terms—concessions that nearly every power seems to feel beforehand can never be granted.

With respect to the merits of the war, and who has the righteous side of it, it is very hard to decide. Shallow and but half-informed persons give it for Servia and against Turkey. That may have been so at first. Servia had grievances. They were real and serious. They needed redressing. And surely they were enough to provoke a power to war. But on the first outbreak against the Sultan's government there were promises of an alteration; and probably with an exaction of guarantees by the great powers, they might have been alleviated, and in time entirely done away. But there was another power behind the scene. Russia coveted Constantinople. Russia wanted coast-line. And Servia has been a tool in the hand of Russia to weaken the Asiatic colonists. It is Russian volunteers with special permission to join the Servian rank and file. Russian money, Russian guns, Russian shot, Russian almost everything, that has kept alive the fearful carnage, and caused a prosperous, although not very rich, country to be depopulated and turned into a waste. It is thought that England has been awfully guilty in this matter—that she has supported Mohammedanism—that she has been special pleader for Bashi-Bazouk butcheries, and shielders of the savages chargeable with the wrong—that she has turned recreant to Christians. One time we thought so ourself. Now, however, we think differently. That the government has sometimes erred all will admit; but England saw Russia behind the scenes, and has acted against her rather than Servia, not compounding any of the Turkish crimes, of which, however, as statistics show, there has been an equal number on the Servian side. Let us not be judged from what we write to be on the side of Turkey; we only put on paper that it is our conviction that it is six of one and half-a-dozen of the other. Both are more or less actuated by an evil spirit, and belong to what is Scripturally termed this "present evil age."

PROPHECIES ABOUT THE WAR.

Everybody who knows much of England knows, that although there are many in this country who believe in the second advent of God's Son into this world, for purposes of government and blessing, the advocates of this sublime truth are very loth to commit themselves to dates. In this, they somewhat differ from American brethren. They are generally very coy of dates, and look more to events. Except about three or four men, that class who can tell almost the tick of the clock of a given day of a given month of a given year when the Return will transpire, does not exist among us.

But prophetic students in England were getting dull and sleepy. This war, however, has caused many to wake up, and cry aloud, "The Lord is at hand!" Pamphlets are issuing forth from the press, sermons are being preached, lectures delivered—all declaring that Jesus is at hand. Never, in all our experience, did we see so much stir, so much looking out, such a general conviction that the day of salvation is not far off. One pamphlet on the table by our side, says: "Russia at Constantinople! Coming General War! Certain Fate of Turkey! The World's Tribulation, and the Time of the End; or the Eastern Question and the Turkish Revolution viewed in the Light of Prophecy; showing the Certain Fate of the Turkish Empire, the Return of the Jews, the Destruction of the Papacy, and the Great Tribulation and Conflict of all Nations as predicted in Holy Scripture." We send this pamphlet to the Editor of the Crisis, that he may use his discretion as to publishing the whole, or any part of it, in the paper. It may give some idea of the interest awakened in the mind of the British public when we say, that an edition of fifty-five thousand of this pamphlet has been already bought up, and there is just ready (we hear, all to fill orders), another edition of forty-five thousand; making in all one hundred thousand! Not a bad circulation for a few weeks! This one fact will show what enquiry there is about the meaning of the war. The pamphlet, as will be seen, professes to subsequate events by the Scriptures. (In passing, we have taken one of the pages of the wrapper in the forthcoming edition, to fill with advertisements of Life-in-Christ publications. Trust that some will get light on other subjects at the same time.)

Canon Hoare, also, has published a very good book of more than one hundred pages, entitled "Rome, Turkey and Jerusalem." We were so prodigal of our time that we read it right through—a thing we have not done with any other work for a long time, our hours being too precious and too much engaged. We were pleased, edified, and benefitted. We procure a copy for the Editor and send it on—it may please him to give a chapter or two from the work. Thus this war in the East is regarded as no ordinary war; but one that shall prepare the way for the coming of the Son of Man! May it be so! May He come! The world wants Him, to re-organize and regenerate its territory! And we who are His, loving him, serving him, we want him. There is a warm welcome awaiting him in our hearts. He says: "I am coming speedily!" And our lips respond: "Amen! be thou coming, Lord Jesus." (Rotherham's translation).

THE FALLIBLE INFALLIBLE POPE.

Something about the Pope, or my letter will be no letter. You know how Pius IX busies himself in cursing. Anathemas are very plentiful with the (un) "holy father." Often has he held the terrors of his asserted but bogus viceregal power over the heads of European infidels! Often has he consigned heretics to eternal perdition! Some have gone quick indeed to the hottest hell of tradition's imagination and Romish creed, if we believe all that Papistical organs tell. But why should we believe this, when it is now evident that Pius IX does not believe it himself? What do you think? The miscreants (?) that the Vatican has piously and mercilessly sent to hell have a chance yet to come out of the place of torment! That poor, fallible, fickle, double-minded old man at Rome actually sang on "All Souls' Day," Nov. 2nd, a requiem mass for the repose of the souls of "all his enemies who while living were the most instrumental in afflicting him and bringing about his spoliation." Absurd! He first anathematized and sent them to hell, where of course they were given a good double for all they had done to his (un) holiness;" and then, not satisfied with the eternal justice of their sentence, in his—shall we say infallibility?—he prays that they may come out again! Of course, according to Romish prints, Pope Pius IX is a second Jesus Christ praying for his enemies! Again we have a proof of the emptiness of that proud title of infallibility that the Romish hierarchy, in council assembled, attributed to the occupant of the Papal chair. It is patent that the Pope is not "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

GUIDO FAWKES' DAY.

The fifth of November is a day that the Romish Church would like to blot out of the calendar. It is usual here to let off fireworks on this day, and make the night one of rejoicing, in commemoration of the deliverance granted the English Parliament—Lords and Commons,—and King James I, by the discovery of a plot by which the whole of the legislative body of the land were to meet with a sudden death. It was in the year 1605. The whole affair however came to light, and Guido Fawkes suffered death for his crimes, together with other conspirators. Facts showed that it was a papist device. Ever since then there has been a commemoration of the deliverance, and crackers, squibs, blue-lights, roman candles, effigies of Fawkes, etc., are let off or burned to keep in memory the event. Sermons are preached on the preceding or succeeding Sabbath, and public thanks are given to God for his kind preservation. Of course, Romanists do not like this. But England can never forget her obligations to Divine goodness, and annually she pays her tribute of gratitude to God, and in a way makes merry over the salvation. We write on the 4th, Saturday night. To-morrow is Sunday, the 5th, and a Romish paper at hand talks about there being no 5th of November this year, the calendar being perverse. But no doubt there will ring out from many English pulpits the warning cry, "Beware!" Some Romish prints see in this festival nothing less than an annual insult; but from the Protestant standpoint it is not regarded in any such way—it is merely a yearly thanksgiving. Surely, we want no popery; we can do without it.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

There was a meeting of Christ's followers on Rock Creek, in Lincoln Co., Kansas, Oct. 26th, and over the Sabbath. Elders Spencer from Ill., Knox, Hayworth, Mass., McCarty and Thorp were present, also several brethren from a distance. Bro. Spencer preached two earnest, stirring sermons, for which we thank God. Others preached according to their ability. Perfect accord seemed to prevail, and all passed off pleasantly. A Conference was formed in the interest of present truth, of which Bro. W. H. McCarty was chosen evangelist. Seventy-five dollars were pledged toward his support, and a horse to use this coming winter. May the blessing of our Father go with him, and make him very successful in winning souls to Jesus. Brethren, pray for us. We feel that the Judge standeth at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let all be ready to meet the Savior when he comes.

J. S. THORP, Sec. of Conf.

MAHOMET.—NO. 2.

The following is a Condensed History of Mahomet, sent us by Bro. H. Pratt.

We closed our last with the flight of Mahomet from Mecca, and his triumphant entry into Medina, with his devoted follower Abu Buker, 1254 years ago, and about 1260 from the time he summoned his tribe to listen to his claims and mission as the "prophet of God." From this time a great change came over the prophet. He was now at the head of a formidable sect composed of converts in Medina and refugees from Mecca. Thirteen years of persecution with his inveterate hatred of idolatry had prepared him for revenge. Soon after his arrival at Medina he married the beautiful Ayesha, daughter of Abu Beker. The peaceful mission of former saints, he said, had proved unavailing. He as the last of the prophets, had been entrusted with that terrible argument, the sword. All who refused conformity to the new religion, were to be openly despoiled, or slain. Having been successful over some caravans which gave him abundance of plunder, he assumed a more decided tone, and ruled with more arbitrary sway. He confiscated the wealth of the Jews, and banished seven hundred of them to Syria. He instituted Mecca for Jerusalem, to which all Moslems must turn when at their devotions.

After six years of conflict and war, he set forth with 1400 of his followers to visit the sacred, though hostile city, Mecca. He was obliged to return without passing around the Caaba, or drinking of the well zem zem; but with the promise of an appointed time when he might return, and the gates should be opened to him. On his return to Medina his pretensions were so great that a Persian monarch sent orders to his viceroy to restore Mahomet to reason, or send him his head.

At the allotted time Mahomet, numerously attended, made his pilgrimage to Mecca. He reverently performed the usual rights, and gained many converts. Khaled, who had been sent to Syria to avenge the death of a Mohammedan envoy, defeated the enemy, that greatly outnumbered his own troops, and returned to Medina laden with spoil. In honor of which he received the title "Sword of God." With increased power came enlarged views of conquest and universal conversion to the faith of Islam. To gain possession of the holy city Mecca, to purify it of idolatry, and to convert the Caaba into a shrine for the faithful, was now his cherished desire. Seven years from his memorable flight, Mahomet, with ten thousand men, was on the road to Mecca. Abu Safian, being captured and made a reluctant convert, after his release returned to Mecca and assured them of the vanity of resistance. The victor approached his home slowly by reason of the vast multitude that thronged around him. He repressed hostilities, and through the open gates proceeded at once to the Caaba.

Here he made the seven circuits of adoration, touching at each the sacred stone from paradise. He then destroyed 365 idols, not sparing even the images of Abraham and Ishmael. He drank from the well zem zem and appointed his uncle Al Abbas as guardian to the sacred fountain. His descendants retain the office to this day.

He treated his enemies with great magnanimity, and proclaimed Mecca an inviolable sanctuary while earth should endure. The work of forcibly converting the neighboring tribes was speedily commenced by Khaled "Sword of God," and others. A great confederacy of the tribes was formed against Islam. Mahomet met them in the valley of the mountain with 12,000 men and a bloody conflict ensued. "The furnace is kindling," cried Mahomet exultingly, as he saw the glitter of arms and the flash of weapons. Stooping from his saddle, and grasping a handful of dust he scattered it in the air toward the enemy. "Confusion on their faces," he cried. "May this dust blind them." The idolaters were defeated.

His influence and authority spread in a wonderful manner. Tribe after tribe sent in their adhesion to his faith, or authority. Mahomet resolved to carry the war into Syria. To those who opposed on account of the heat of the season, he said, "The fire of hell is hotter than the desert." When the yearly resort to Mecca again occurred, he proclaimed, by special revelation, that at the expiration of four months no time or place, however sacred, should protect the idolators. Daily he witnessed the success of his mission, but his own health failing him, he resolved to spend the remainder of his strength in a pilgrimage to Mecca.

Devotees from all parts of Arabia thronged to join the pious undertaking. Accompanied by his nine wives and escorted by more than 100,000 of his faithful followers, the prophet set out on his last pilgrimage. No enemies beset the way. He arrived at the sacred city, rigidly performed all accustomed rites, sacrificed a great multitude of camels, preached and prayed long and fervently, and his words were recorded for the guide of the faithful. After his return, he made preparation for the invasion of Syria and Palestine.

In the eleventh year of the Hegira, a great army was assembled, and the command entrusted to Osama, a youth of twenty. He had marched but a few miles when he was summoned to return. Mahomet had been taken violently ill. At midnight he called his slave to accompany him to the grave yard, where he addressed its sleeping dwellers in words of wild pathetic eloquence; saying he should soon be with them. His disorder became a burning fever. He recovered sufficiently to appear once more in public, and requested all to whom he had appeared to act unjustly, to give him the opportunity of reparation. His last words were eloquent with language of piety, and remind us of the pure and simple doctrine while yet untainted with sensuality and ambition. He died, apparently, in the full assurance of Paradise, in the 11th year of the Hegira, A. D. 632, aged sixty-three years. He left his mantle of genius to others.

His death was succeeded by a series of invasions and conquests, the most rapid and wonderful the world ever witnessed. Damascus was surrendered after a siege of twelve months. Abu Beker, the successor of Mahomet, died, and the mantle fell upon Omar. He was unsurpassed for strength, valor, and fanaticism in the Mahometan faith. Balbec and Emessa having surrendered, Omar directed his efforts toward Jerusalem.

After four months siege of Abu-Obadiah, it surrendered, on condition that Omar come from Medina to receive it. The prophet consented. He travelled on a red camel with a pair of saddle bags containing a few dry dates, some sodden grain, a wooden dish, and a leathern bottle of water. In this style he reached the city, which immediately surrendered. But when the Arab, in his patched and dirty sheep-skin garments, seated himself in the "Church of the Resurrection," the patriarch groaned forth in the bitterness of his spirit, "that the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, was now set up in the holy place. A. D. 637.

After having founded a mosque on the site of Solomon's temple, and left instructions for the conquest of Syria and Egypt, he returned to Medina. In six years, and in the seventeenth of the Hegira, Syria fell into the hands of the Moslem invaders. Egypt soon submitted. Alexandria, with its renowned library was in the hands of Omar, and its books afforded fuel for the baths for six months. "If they accorded with the Koran there was no need of them, if otherwise they ought to be burned." In 641, in a battle called "victory of victories," 100,000 Persians fell. Persia submitted to the conquerer. In 21 years from the flight to Medina, Syria, Egypt, and Persia became his followers or his subjects. Spain, next in her turn, bows to Islam. France would have fallen but for the skill of Charles Martel. The power and prosperity of the sultan continued to increase, and in 1071 Asia fell under his dominion. In 1453 Constantinople surrendered to Mahomet, and ever since it has been the capital of the Turkish or Moslem power.

Europe had become terror stricken with their conquests, until they were almost in despair. At length, at the great naval battle fought in the Gulf of Lepanto, 1571, the moslems sustained an overwhelming defeat from the allied Christians, under the command of the celebrated Don John, of Austria. So important to the salvation of christendom was this victory considered, that on hearing of it the Pope, in the joy of his heart, exclaimed with a species of profane piety, "There was a man sent from God, and his name was John." Austria and Hungary finally compelled them to retreat. Russia, under the reign of Katharine, defeated and pushed back their frontier, while her haughty inscription on the southern highway, "This is the road to Byzantium," indicated her ambition, and foreshadowed the policy of her successors.

Why European Turkey has not been crushed before is because of the jealousy of the other European powers. A refusal of Russian aggrandizement was the cause which severed the alliance of Napoleon and Alexander, and plunged Europe in one of her most destructive wars. Still Russia presses on toward her mark. In 1783, 1794, and 1812, she robbed Turkey of more territory than is now left her in Europe. One only acquisition remains, the possession of Constantinople and Roumalia.

The holy land has charms for Russia as well as for the Sultan, and to this they will come. Defeated once and again, Russia seems to have gathered all her resources for a final battle with the Moslem. The Turks have long since expected to be driven out of Europe, and have made their burying places across the Bosphorus. But onward still the prophetic seer locates her demise, even in the glorious holy mountain, "and none shall help him."

How sublime to be living in the time of the end! Yea more, in the end of time. Isaiah graphically describes the terrible scenes and the places that shall bring Mohammedanism to its end, thus: "The Lord of hosts hath sworn saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed so shall it stand; that I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot; then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off his shoulders. This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth, and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all nations." Isa. 14: 24, 25, 26.

THE MINIMUM CHRISTIAN.

The minimum christian. And who is he? The christian who is going to heaven at the cheapest rate possible. The christian who intends to get all of the world he can, and not meet the worldling's doom. The christian who aims to have as little religion as may be, without lacking it altogether.

The minimum christian goes to church in the morning, and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is sleepy, or he has the headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in prayer and praise. He applies the truth very judiciously, sometimes to himself, oftener to his neighbors.

The minimum christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well, but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath-school he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week that he needs the Sabbath as a day of rest; nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty, that he must beg to be excused. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions and colportage, and gives his mite. He thinks there are "too many appeals" but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it; at all events, he aims at it.

The minimum christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theatre and card-playing, and fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He cannot see the harm in this, or that, or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a christian, and dance and go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do. Why should not he? He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of God and the people of the world, that it is hard to say on which side of it he is actually to be found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that in trying to get to heaven with a little religion, you miss it altogether; lest without gaining the world, you lose your own soul.

REPORT OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE A. C. CONFERENCE.

Pursuant to notice, the twenty-third annual session of this Conference convened in Manchester, N. H., at Martin's Hall, Oct. 24th, 1876.

A business session was called by the Pres., Eld. A. Ross, at one o'clock, P. M., Oct. 25th. Prayer by Bro. Ross. Minutes of the Secretary were read and accepted.

By vote, the Chair appointed Brn. E. S. Moulton, G. W. Brown, and J. F. Chamberlin, Committee on Credentials, who reported the following membership: Preachers: A. Ross, T. W. Piper, J. G. Smith, J. F. Chamberlin, G. W. Brown, S. Roby, N. Wheeler, J. Parsons, C. W. Sargeant, C. H. Fletcher, D. W. Davis, E. S. Moulton, Sr. L. E. Saulpaugh, C. E. Hurd, A. S. Williams, J. W. White, C. S. Emerson, Geo. Thompson, J. Kimball, R. Morrill, E. Morrill, C. R. Parsons, J. Couch, D. M. Leavitt, J. B. Paine. Delegates: H. M. Bowen, S. Jackman, J. M. Quimby, D. N. Smith, Sr. Burbank, C. E. Hurd. A. F. Merrill. By vote, the Chair appointed the following Committee to prepare business for the meeting: C. W. Sargeant, N. Wheeler, and J. Parsons, who reported the following order of business: 1. Election of officers for the ensuing year and the election of a Ministerial Committee, a Quarterly Conference Committeee, a Protracted Meeting Committee and a Tract Committee. Reports of Treasurer, Ministerial Committee, Quarterly Conference Committee, Protracted Meeting Committee, and Tract Committee. Reports of Ministers and Delegates at the option of the Chair. Miscellaneous business. The above was accepted and adopted.

By vote, Brn. C. E. Hurd, of Rye, N. H., and A. S. Williams, of Sutton, N. H., were admitted members of this Conference. By vote, the Chair appointed the following committee on nomination: C. W. Sargent, J Parsons, D. W. Davis.

Voted, To adjourn to meet at the close of the P. M. service.

Met as adjourned. The nominating Committee submitted the following report, which was accepted. For Pres., A. Ross; Vice Pres., T. W. Piper; Sect., C. H. Fletcher; Treas., J. G. Smith; Miinisterial Committee: T. W. Piper, N. Wheeler, A. Ross, C. S. Emerson, G. W. Brown; Quar. Conf. Com. N. Wheeler, C. E. Hurd, C. H. Fletcher; Protracted Meeting Committee, E. S. Moulton, Geo. W. Brown, W. W. Sutherland; Tract Com., E. Morrill, S. Roby, C. R. Parsons. The above nominations were elected. The Treasurer reported as follows: Receipts for the past year, $56.44. Expended, $46.29. Left in Treasury, $10.15. The report was accepted.

Bro. N. Wheeler, Chairman of Quarterly Conference Committee, gave the following report: Dear Brn. and Srs. of the Advent Christian Conference of New Hampshire: Having been chosen as Chairman of the Quar. Conf. Com., it falls to my lot to make a report of our labors in the responsible position you have placed us.

Our first Quar. Conf. was held with the church at Melvin Village, where Bro. T. W. Piper resides and labors a portion of the time, commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 22nd, and continuing over the following Sunday. There was preaching by Elds. Levi Allen, W. W. Sutherland, C. R. Parsons, D. Eastman, John Parsons, and N. Wheeler. The Spirit of the Lord rested down, and on Friday evening five were out for prayers. Saturday morning a deep feeling was manifest, and several expressed themselves as being in possession of sweet peace from the Lord. On the last evening of the meeting seven came forward for prayers, four unconverted ones and three backsliders. We left the place feeling that there were many more who were deeply convicted of sin, and who would find peace in Christ if they would but confess with their mouths what they believed in their hearts.

I am informed that Brn. J. Parsons and Sutherland remained with Bro. Piper, and labored for several evenings. The result was that some eighteen were afterwards baptized.

Our second Quar. Conf. was with the church at Haverhill, where Bro. Geo. M. Little is laboring. On account of a fearful storm and wind which obstructed the roads, and caused some of the trains to cease running for the day, we were unable to reach the place in season to commence our worship until Thursday evening, Feb. 3rd. The meeting continued over the following Lord's day. Preaching by Brn. J. G. Smith, C. R. Parsons, D. D. Page, D. W. Davis, D. Eastman and N. Wheeler. On Saturday morning Bro. Wm. C. Bixby, of Warren, N. H., was received by vote of the Conf. as a member. Sunday morning, at 10 o'clock, Bro. Geo. M. Little related his experience connected with his conversion and call to the ministry, which was very interesting, and called out much feeling from the hearts of the goodly audience present. Bro. J. G. Smith then gave an interesting discourse from Mark 16: 15, 16, after which, Bro. Geo. M. Little was set apart for the work of the gospel ministry by the laying on of our hands.

The assembly was quite large on Saturday and Sunday, and the candid, intelligent people of Haverhill seemed almost astonished to hear the Word of God preached to them with such power and truthfulness by men who had not been privileged with an education. We think many of them left the meeting with a conviction on their minds that the people, called Adventists, have much of the Word of God to preach. We have since had the privilege of dedicating to the Lord their new Chapel which they have so speedily erected.

Our third Quar. Conf. was held at Whitefield, commencing Wednesday evening, June 14th, and closing June 18th. The attendance was good and the Spirit of the Lord was among the church. Several had recently been converted under the faithful labors of Bro. G. E. Lang, whose testimony seemed to give the meetings a high and clear tone. Brn. A. Ross and J. Couch did most of the preaching. Bro. L. C. McKinstry and N. Wheeler assisted in preaching the Word. Brn. T. E. Lang, their present pastor, and E. S. Moulton were found faithful at their post of duty at this meeting. We have to say to the praise of God, and to give due honor to the churches where these Conferences were held, that they have each done their duty in sustaining them.

The fourth Conference was handed over to Bro. J. W. White, of Portsmouth, we understand, and it has not been held. I remain your brother in Christ,

N. WHEELER.

The above was accepted.

Voted, To adjourn to meet at the close of the P. M. service. Met as adjourned. Bro. E. Morrill, Chairman of the Tract Committee, gave the following report, which was accepted. Amount of receipts, $25.57. Expended, $22.80. Balance on hand, $2.77. The Conference then listened to reports from all the preachers. The following brethren reported by letter: Geo. M. Little, Wm. C. Stewart, A. Gordon, Geo. C. Bowles, A. H. Clark, D. Eastman, S. Varney, D. D. Page, E. N. Hinckley, Geo. H. Wallace.

Voted, To adjourn to half-past six. Met as adjourned.

Voted, To adjourn to meet to-morrow at eight o'clock, A. M. Met at half-past eight.

Voted, To take from the table the motion to have the annual Conf. on the Alton Bay camp-ground, which was laid upon the table at our last session. After considerable discussion,

Voted, To indefinitely postpone the motion.

Voted, To amend the Constitution so that we have an annual Com. of three on missions, whose duty it shall be to raise funds for mission purposes in N. H., and see the same expended.

Voted, That the Chair appoint a Committee of three to nominate the Com. on missions. The Chair appointed E. S. Moulton, J. G. Smith, C. R. Parsons. The Com. reported the names of E. S. Moulton, J. W. White, and C. H. Fletcher. The report was accepted and adopted.

Voted, That a collection be taken during this meeting for mission purposes.

Voted, To adjourn to meet at the close of the P. M. service. Met as adjourned.

Voted, That we now choose the delegates to the next annual session of the A. C. Association. Elected T. W. Piper, C. H. Fletcher, G. W. Brown, A. Ross, E. S. Moulton, N. Wheeler and D. M. Leavitt.

Voted, To adopt the following resolution: Resolved, That the Ministerial Committee be requested to use their influence to prevent the publication of appointments in the Crisis of those men who are scattering discord, or living lives which are contrary to the Scriptures, when such facts are known to them, or they are duly notified of the same by responsible persons.

Voted, To adjourn to meet to-morrow at eight o'clock, A. M. Met at half-past nine.

Voted, That brethren and sisters, not members of this Conference, be invited to a seat with us, and join in our deliberations. Listened to reports of delegates of churches.

Voted, That Bro. Geo. C. Bowles of Sugar Hill be admitted a member of this Conf. The following resolution was accepted and adopted.

Resolved, That we hereby give expression of our appreciation of the generous and noble hospitality which has entertained us during this Conference session, also for reduction of fare over the various railroads.

Voted, That the minutes of the Sect. be published in the World's Crisis.

Voted, To adjourn without date.

C. H. FLETCHER, Sec.

P. S. Brn. J. F. Chamberlin of Rochester, and A. S. Williams of Sutton, were duly set apart to the work of the gospel ministry, during this meeting, by the laying on of hands and prayer. C. H. F.

IMPORTANCE OF RELIGION.

Numbers are of opinion that people should adhere to the religion in which they were educated; but does not this imply that they deem all religion a vain and trifling matter? A nation may retain some inconvenient usages without much censure, but to support unjust and ruinous laws because their fathers did so, would imply a most unreasonable and detestable obstinacy. Thus, some circumstances in religion may perhaps be retained, because they are deemed venerable for their antiquity; but its grand essentials are our life, and we are ruined if we prefer human tradition to divine revelation. Such an opinion vindicates the Jews in rejecting the gospel, and exculpates those who cried out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." It espouses the cause of Pagans, Mahometans and Papists, while it condemns prophets, apostles, martyrs, and zealous reformers; and, in short, it considers it criminal to oppose any established error in imposition. But the monstrous deformity of this tenet must be visible whenever it is brought forth to the light, and we need only exhort every one to consider the subject with application to himself, and to act accordingly.

It will then be deemed most rational to examine with diligent and impartial care, the evidences of divine revelation; and if the mind be satisfied in this respect, daily to search the Scriptures, with earnest prayer for divine instruction, according to the apostle's exhortation: "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." But let it also be remembered, that multitudes study religion as a science, and thus adopt a Scriptural creed, yea, are useful in propagating the truth, who yet are not themselves truly religious; nay, many have prophesied, and wrought miracles, who have been at the same time workers of iniquity. Notions may float in the understanding, when they do not durably affect the heart, or influence the conduct; but unless the truth be an engrafted and sanctifying principle in the soul, it must be "held in unrighteousness," and such a religion is indeed a vain thing, though vital christianity is unspeakably valuable and important.

Our Lord requires his disciples to seek, "first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." We should set out early in youth with this most important business; but if we have wasted a very great part of our lives already, we should immediately attend to it with proportionable earnestness and industry. We should begin every year, month, week and day, with this one thing needful; to which the prime of our affections and the best of hours, should be dedicated; and all other pursuits, if possible, rendered subservient. "Labor not for the meat that perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give you." If this be neglected, all is lost, whatever else may seem to succeed; if this be secured, all things will surely turn out to your advantage.—Thos. Scott, M. A.

ENGAGE in no pursuit in which you cannot look up to God and say, "Bless me in this, O my Father!"

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOME ADORNMENT.

Many are unhappy in their home life because they are trying so hard to keep up appearances. They expend largely of means, and labor unremittingly to gain the praise of their associates—those who really care nothing for them or their prosperity. One article after another is considered indispensable to the household appointments, until many expensive additions are made that, while giving a momentary satisfaction to the eye, do not increase the comfort of the family one whit. At the same time, all these things have taxed the strength and patience, and consumed valuable time which might be expended in the service of the Lord.

The precious grace of God is made secondary to matters of no real importance, and while collecting material for enjoyment, they lose the capacity for happiness. They find that their possessions fail to give the satisfaction they had hoped to derive from them. This endless round of labor, and unceasing anxiety to embellish the home for visitors and strangers to admire, never pays for the time and means thus expended. It is hanging about the neck a yoke of bondage grievous to be borne.

In many households there are four walls and costly furniture, velvet carpets and plate glass mirrors; and this place is wrongly named home. That sacred word does not belong to the glittering mansion, where the joys of domestic life are unknown. There are spacious parlors, closed from the sweet sunshine and the life-giving air, for fear those choicest gifts of Heaven might tarnish the furniture and fade the carpets. Sunless and damp, these rooms are unlighted and unheated save when visitors are to be entertained. Then the doors are thrown open, and the treasures, too precious for the use and comfort of the family, are devoted to unsympathizing acquaintances. . . .

The very best part of the house, and the most comfortable furniture, should be for the use of the family, for the comfort of those who really live in the house. Such a home would be most attractive to that class of friends who really care for us, whom we could benefit, and by whom we could be benefited. But those guests who are attracted to us by the prospect of sumptuous dinners, and an extravagant luxury of style, are not the ones whose companionship will improve our minds or hearts. We have no moral right to lavish time and bounty upon such visitors, while our precious God-given children are suffering gross neglect.

But it is so flattering to the pride of some persons to exhibit a certain style of living for the benefit of occasional guests, that they are willing to sacrifice the daily peace and comfort of life for this empty gratification. The gorgeously embellished mansions, costly carpets, the toil in serving up dishes for epicurean appetites, the extravagant entertainments which swallow up thousands of dollars, and pompous equipages more for show than comfort, bring no peaceful contentment, because they have no connection with the real joys of life.

As these extravagances fail to satisfy their possessors, they blindly seek to remedy the failure by adding new luxuries, with greater dissatisfaction, and an increase of care and anxiety as a result. Decorations of dress and of houses do not make happy people; but the lowliest dwelling may be beautified, and the poorest family be made rich, by the possession of meekness, kindness and love. Pleasant voices, gentle manners, and sincere affection, that finds expression in all the actions, make even a hovel the happiest of homes, upon which the Creator looks with approbation, unto which angels are attracted, the inmates of which, though they have not "that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel," have that which is far better, "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."—Health Reformer.

CO-OPERATION OF THE WIFE.—No man ever prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. If she unites in mutual endeavors, or rewards his labors with an endearing smile, with what confidence will he resort to his occupation, meet difficulty, and encounter danger, if he knows that he is not spending his strength in vain, but that his labor will be rewarded by the sweets of home! Solicitude and disappointment enter the history of every man's life, and he is but half provided for his voyage who finds but an associate for happy hours, while for his months of darkness and distress no sympathizing partner is prepared.

A SMOKING MINISTER.—Smoke? Yes, he does—in his study—in the streets. I see him day after day in a book store in Park Row, N. Y., with a cigar or dingy pipe in his mouth. Awful! shameful! Need we marvel that young men in the church and out of it—little urchins and rag-a-muffins—are seen in the streets chewing and smoking the vile "Indian weed," when ministers of the gospel, elders, deacons, and class leaders set the example? Example kills, example cures.—Selected.

COMING OF JESUS.

A. H. RENNIE.

Ye saints who are longing
Your Savior to see,
From this body of sorrow
And sin to be free,
While I tell you how near
That blest period may be,
To my musings a moment give ear.

Lift your heads all ye saints,
For his coming is near,
The Savior in glory
Will ere long appear;
Though we know not the day,
Nor the month, nor the year,
As the definite time it may be.

It may be ere this year,
Upon which we've begun,
Its full period of months,
Weeks and days it has run;
For we know by the signs
In the stars, moon and sun,
That his coming must be very near.

Ere the sun from the east
In his glory shall rise,
As the King of the day
To illumine the skies,
The last trumpet's loud blast
May the wicked surprise
From his carnal-security dream.

Ere the clock round its dial
An hour may trace
To eternity, time may
Abandon its place,
And the sinner, who now
Is the object of grace,
May be left to eternal despair.

It will be as the lightning,
The Savior has said;
Some will be in the field,
Some at work, some in bed.
At his coming the righteous
Have nothing to dread,
But the sinner, oh! where
Shall he flee?

THE POWER OF FAITH.

R. KELSEY.

"And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 JOHN 5: 4.

When the serpent tried to beguile Eve, if she had not listened to his siren voice, but had turned away from him, believing God's word, the tempter would have had no power over her, and thus all the sad calamities that followed in its train would have been averted. Sin would not have entered into the world, neither death by sin.

Thus we see what great results come from an act of disobedience toward God. The Eden pair were surrounded by all that heart could wish; yet, that one prohibition, it seems, made them unhappy. They had an ambition to become as gods, and in order to attain to the position Eve was willing to risk everything on the unsupported assertion of one whom she knew not, in preference to believing her Creator; and by their means brought death and all its attendant evils into the world. This shows how dangerous it is for any of God's creatures to reject his Word.

When God warned Noah that he would drown the world for their wickedness, Noah simply took God at his word and did his bidding; and, though he was a great many years preparing for that flood, yet the world was faithless and unbelieving up to the very time that the flood came and took them all away. But Noah rode off triumphantly in the ark, which God had commanded him to make in readiness for this emergency.

Truly this was the victory that overcame the world, even Noah's faith. What a great contrast between the two. By Eve's want of faith in God's word, the Eden pair were driven out of the garden, the way to the tree of life guarded, the curse brought upou the earth, sin and misery brought into the world. By Noah's implicit faith in God's Word, himself and family were saved, while all the rest of the world perished.

When Moses sent the twelve spies to view the promised land and bring back a report, they agreed that it was indeed a goodly land flowing with milk and honey; but as to the feasibility of taking it, ten of them reported that there were giants and walled cities in the land, and consequently it would be impossible to take it. However, the other two said, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." The two evidently based their opinion upon the promises of God made to the fathers, and the ten drew theirs from a human standpoint, But alas! how different the result! All but these two faithful men, of the hosts of Israel, perished miserably in the wilderness. But these two were permitted to triumphantly enter the promised land.

Evidently, these were all men of good mind and judgment, selected with great care one from each tribe, the grand difference being simply this: the ten looked at that formidable array of natural difficulties, and it made their hearts faint. While the two looked away from all these things and only remembered the precious promise of God that this goodly land should be given into their hands.

Paul, in writing to the Romans concerning Abraham, says: "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God. And being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was also able to perform. And, therefore, it was imputed to him for righteousness. Now, it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

Abraham must believe that God held power even to raise Isaac from the dead, in order to have his faith imputed to him for righteousness, and we, also, must believe that God did raise Jesus from the dead, and will raise us up also, if we sleep in Jesus, or if we are alive, and remain until the Lord comes, and are found looking and longing for his appearing, then "shall we be caught up together with the dead in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

We must positively believe God's Word, not in part, but as a grand harmonious whole, or we cannot expect to have part in his great salvation. Without faith it is impossible to please God. The Word reads: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Many, very many men, in these degenerate days, hold that if we honestly believe an error, it is just as good as the truth; that God will not condemn us for it. The ten spies, undoubtedly, believed that the land could not be taken, but that did not save them from perishing in the wilderness. Though men may not believe that the Lord Jesus will soon be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, their unbelief will not alter the facts. Let us say with Paul, "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

It does seem to me very evident that the coming of the Lord is nigh, even at the doors; and that we must soon meet him in judgment, and answer to him for the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or whether they be bad. And why not, dear friends, go to work in good earnest to prepare for this great event, and to the best of our own ability warn those about us to flee from the wrath to come, and point them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, instead of hesitating and doubting, and not only lose our own souls, but be the means of dragging many others down to perdition with us. Let us be like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh that we may open unto him immediately.

Delays are dangerous; we surely have no time to lose, but let me say to each one that is still unprepared, as the angel did to Lot, "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plains; escape to the mountain lest thou be consumed." Always bearing in mind that this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith.

PENCIL POINTS.

I. I. LESLIE.

The One Talent. It was just as bright as any of the seven given to the other two servants. It was just as pure as theirs. It was just as high in value as either of the talents which they received. It was not a spurious coin, a counterfeit. There was no discount on this talent. It had a par value in the market; and he who had this one talent had no reason to fear in presenting it, nor to be ashamed of it. It was given to be used, not laid by, or aside, to gather dust and rust. It was given to be invested, not rolled up in a napkin, or placed in a hole dug in the earth. It was given to be used; and there was no good reason why it should not be used. It was wicked not to use it. There was no excuse for hiding it because it was a single talent that was received. This excuse was not given by the unfaithful servant. He did not find fault because it was but one talent that was entrusted to him for improvement; nor was this the ground of his excuse for doing as he did. Another excuse was given.

My brother, what excuse are you giving for hiding your one talent? Are you giving the excuse the "wicked and slothful servant" did? You say, "No; I dare not give that one." Well, then, are you giving the one he might have offered? "I had but one talent, and I was ashamed to show it." If this be your excuse for hiding your talent, make it no longer. It is a foolish, if not a wicked one. Better offer none than this. That servant knew better than to make this excuse to his lord. How this would have sounded; "You gave me but one talent, and I was ashamed to show that, or try to do anything with it!"

Worshiping. Many pray who do not worship God. They pray with pride in their hearts; there is no worship of God there. Men meet, sing, pray, exhort, listen to sermons, and God is not worshiped by any of it. They return as they came, without the spirit of devotion. Their heads and hearts are high; they bow them not before the Lord. There is no sighing, either for their own sins, or for the abominations done in the land. There are no tears of penitence shed, nor weeping over sinful men. There are songs of joy and praise, when there should be pleading with God for mercy. There are professions of purity and holiness, when there should be confessions of faults and sins. Much is desired for the head, but little for the heart; much for edification, and little for sanctification. Humiliation, self-abasement, true contrition, meekness, reverence, poverty of spirit, are not the characteristics of the worship of the church to-day. But the true worship of God includes and embraces all these. "He seeketh such to worship him."

Reader, do you worship God? Christian, have you the spirit of devotion when you pray? Have you reverence for the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit! Do you bow in heart when you bend the knee? Do you worship in the spirit, or without it? Is it a form of worship with you, or is it real? Only the real is the worship of God, and such as he will acknowledge and accept. All other worship is mockery.

WHO WILL BE SAVED?

H. C. SMITH.

"Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord."—MATT. 7: 21.

The great Teacher is delivering his inaugural. Israel, in multitudes, are reclining on the mountain side, a motley assemblage, gathered from city and suburb, attracted by the fame of the teacher and healer of Nazareth. In silent astonishment they listen, while he preaches on the ethics of God's revelation, the moral significance of ordinances, types and shadows. That sermon, learned and practiced, accepted and lived, will preserve and immortalize. It contains the milk and strong meat of God's all-powerful, cleansing, saving, sanctifying truth, the joy of ministering spirits, and the hope of earth.

As I read and meditated upon its excellence, the closing remarks more especially, attracted my attention: "Not every one that saith unto me." These words affect me; as I read them again and again, they produce a feeling which I cannot fully describe; and that terrible word, "depart," awes my sensitive conscience. Near my residence is an echo. I move to the proper position, and speak mildly "depart." The returning sound is quite solemn. I put force, sternness and decision in my voice, loud, and clear I utter "depart." Oh, how the repercussion chills me! And I must hear that word, not as a feeble echo, which I can tune and play, but amid the awful, solemn, impressive scenes of the judgment; waving out to nations, kindreds, and tongues; clear, distinct, and decisive, it will penetrate to fathomless heights, and depths, reverberating with the force of a thousand echoes. Never, in the unlimited range of eternal years will this terrible word be spoken again. Once for all, no change or re-enacting. And ere that word be spoken, may sanctifying truth and saving grace deliver us from its personal application. And this word is all the recognition that a host of professors will ever receive. Oh, my Lord, is it so?

Church of Christ, preparing bride, shepherd and flock, shall we emulate the example of Christ, repeat the solemn caution, and, like the apostle, exhort him that thinketh he standeth to take heed?

Brethren and sisters of local churches, shall we remember and renew our covenant vows, to "Diligently and affectionately watch, and admonish each other"? Better a thousand-fold be honest and mutually faithful, lay aside compliments and flatteries, puffs and praises, all false delicacy, and over sensitiveness, and kindly, faithfully, affectionately, point out the spot or wrinkle. Dare to be a true brother. Stand up as Nathan before David.

Are we every whit whole? No spot or wrinkle? Dead to sin, self and the world, alive to Christ, abiding in him, walking in newness of life, body under, and kept in subjection, gospel purity and propriety in all the relations of life—heart full of the infinite peace?

Let us read and reason carefully. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord." Balaam, Saul and Samuel were once equally accepted and inspired prophets. Judas and Peter were both apostles. Ten virgins at one time represented the kingdom of heaven; the church militant is composed of some wheat and a plentiful show of tares. God will honor his Word, but the agent who dispenses it may be lost. "Covet earnestly the best gifts, and yet, show I unto you a more excellent way." Spiritual gifts and endowments are very necessary and desirable, but without the "more excellent thing, I am nothing."

God's church and kingdom, in all their parts and elements, are a combination of harmonies. Here is the secret of its joy, peace and eternal security. Two wills engendered sin, sorrows, death and judgment; two wills deluged the earth and brought down fiery judgments on the cities of the plain; two wills defiled God's earthly tabernacle, grieved the Shekinal, overturned David's throne, led Zion into captivity, and turned the milk and honey land to a barren wilderness; two wills made him a "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," caused Gethsemane's agony and bloody sweat. These two wills must soon collide for the last time.

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." My God, hasten the day of eternal deliverance! Oh, silence these discords and bring in the eternal harmony! Oh, dear readers, study to know his will more and more! and may our wills be wholly lost, and his wholly and faithfully followed.

Body of Christ, and members in particular, bound in one enduring relationship by the strongest, most affectionate and holiest of ties, pray, work, live, suffer, agonize, die for the family interest. Emulate the example of Him who laid aside his glory, made himself of no reputation, and died to restore a divided family. Let us willingly suffer, if need be, having the same object in view.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

A. S. BARNEY.

We believe this prayer will soon be answered, and expect soon to see the King in all his beauty and be made like him, never again to know ought of trials or pain, or any more heart-aches and disappointments. How many hearts to day are crying out "Thy Kingdom come;" weary, toil-worn ones who have long waited their Master's return. O! to all such I would say, lift up your heads and rejoice, your redemption draweth nigh. Jesus is coming to give his weary ones rest. Soon, very soon, we will exchange the cross for the crown. Fight on, a little longer, and tell the world the Nobleman will soon be here.

Bear all the world's scoffs and frowns, for these go with the present truth. I will, with Jesus' help, be bold in this, and never be ashamed of Jesus or his words. Earthly friends will avail me nothing in the hour of trial. We shall all need some stronger arm, and I feel I have one on whom I can depend when heaven and earth shall pass away.

We who love the thought of the coming kingdom and its righteous King, feel that we are ready. But there is another class who would put afar off that day. It will be glorious to the faithful, but awful to the unsaved. My prayer to God is daily, Open their blind eyes, show them their lost condition, so near the judgment and not saved. O! come to Jesus, he will save, though it is the eleventh hour, you may come. O! the great, loving heart of Jesus, full of compassion for you, bids you come.

Can you see no beauty in one who has died that you might live? What you do must be done quickly; no time to dally now. As your eye rests on this, lift your hearts to God, and ask for mercy; he will hear; he never turns away from any who will come with a broken and contrite heart. Do not delay, the hour of the Lord hasteth greatly, and the great day of his wrath will soon burst upon an ungodly world in all its awfulness.

O! be wise, and in that hour you will not have to cry for rocks and mountains to fall on you, and hide you from the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, but with joy you may say this is my God, I have waited for him, and he has come to save me. May God help you is my prayer.

ELECTION.

J. F. MARQUAND.

"There is a remnant according to the election o grace."—ROM. 11: 5.

The doctrine of election has been mystified and brought into disrepute, some having gone so far as to say that a portion of mankind were elected to damnation from the beginning. Let us try and clear up this matter.

We maintain that the atonement covers the whole ground, and was made for the whole race of mankind, for every son and daughter of Adam; and that all mankind are called and elected, all have a part in the great salvation provided by God through his Son Jesus Christ. If this is true, why are not all men saved? For the simple reason that through unbelief and rejection of the Savior, they lose the blessing, they fail to make their calling and election sure, 2 Peter 1: 10; they will not come to Christ, that they might have life. John 5: 40.

Christ is the great Life Giver, and he gives abundantly. John 10: 10. Without him there is no salvation nor life. John 15: 5. Christ is the second Adam, elected by God to be the federal head of the Church, and Governor of the nations; and all mankind must be elected in him, and through him, as there is no life, power, virtue, or goodness outside of him. We are first born in the natural, or First Adam, having a sinful nature and disposition, but by seeking and obeying God our Maker, we are led out of the first Adam into the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. This is God's plan and purpose for saving the whole race.

Now if men and women will stay in the first Adam, and love their chains of sin and folly, they must abide the result, which is death; but if they will come into God's plan, out of the old Adam and into the new Adam, become reconciled to God, love and obey him, keep his covenant, and commandments, and put on the Lord Jesus Christ; then all things will work together for their good, and their pathway grow brighter and smoother. All such persons will add to their faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity; and if they do these things, they will never fall, but be honorably and duly elected to a seat in the kingdom of God, and be upheld by divine grace and mercy. "If God be for us who shall be against us?" "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect?" "Who is he that condemneth?" Rom. 8: 33.

In making up our views on the doctrine of election, we must take into account the character and attributes of Jehovah; that he is impartial, good, pure, compassionate, long suffering; not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; that he is no respecter of persons. He could not ordain evil or wrong beforehand; it is impossible. If there is evil in the world an enemy hath done it. Where evil originated is beyond our knowledge, but it is going to end in the lake of fire and brimstone; there to be consumed. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death." We are fully assured from the Word of God that all the good are elected to eternal life, and all the evil are elected to condign punishment and destruction. There are but two roads; the one leads to God, the other to despair and death. Now choose which one you will take, for on your choice depends your election. No doctrine of the Bible stands in the way of the sinner's return to his Maker, and finding peace and love, in his merciful arms.

The doctrine of election and predestination are fitted in harmoniously with the character and government of God, and stand as pledges to the christian, of faithfulness and truth. We are chosen in Jesus Christ from the foundation of the world, and there is no salvation outside of him, as this is part of the plan before this world was formed. Therefore, let every soul come into this plan, which was devised in the councils of heaven. Eph. 1: 5. Oh! how many excuses are made by men and women why they should not come to God by repentance and faith; but they will all be swept away by the hail storm that is soon coming; Isaiah 28: 17, and the fires which shall devour God's enemies. Heb. 10: 27.

How kind in our Heavenly Father to open up a door of mercy to mankind; to be willing to forgive our sins and make us pure and holy, and thus to fit us to dwell in his Kingdom forever.

The Bible is full of invitations, and glorious promises are held out to poor mortals. The question might be asked why is it that so few embrace the offers of mercy and become christians? The reason is plain; their carnal desires and pleasures keep them from the tree of life, and from God, and they love the world and the lusts of the flesh, for "the carnal mind is enmity against God; it is not subject to his law, nor indeed can it be. Roman 8: 7.

WHAT IS MAN?—PS. 8: 4.

H. ZIEGENFUSS.

How wonderful and glorious are the visible manifestations of the Creator! Him the christian delights to reverence, worship and adore. He created man, amidst all the splendors of a world that was pronounced very good; a world where disease, and death, and the funeral cortege, were unknown, and where none mourned departed friends; where thorns, thistles, and noxious weeds found no place. This man, whom the Creator called forth out of the dust of the ground and animated by the breath of life, he placed in a garden, eastward, in the then Eden state of this planet, with the command that of all its excellences he might freely partake, with but one exception; but, if he violated that exception, he would lose all the glories by which he was then surrounded, and eventually lose animated existence, and go back into his native elements.

We find that man's perpetuity of animated being depended upon obedience to his Creator through a certain trial state, at the end of which time the design of the Creator concerning man would have been complete, namely, the peopling of this planet with an immortal race. But poor short-sighted man listened to Satan, who offered to show him a shorter route to the much desired boon, the eternal perpetuity of his race. We find that man believed Satan, and thus disobeyed his Creator; and the Creator vindicated his law by appointing the laws of man's own nature his executioner; and the first man of our race was executed at the age of nine hundred and thirty, and the unborn millions were doomed to a like fate.

Thus, death has reigned from Adam to Moses; but through Jesus Christ the second Adam, the seed of the woman graciously promised by the Creator in the original Eden, he proposes to generate a progeny to fulfil this original design. Yes, by the immutability of the promise of the Creator, this planet will be the home of immortal beings. And it will again teem with spontaneous plenty, and not a member of the new race will ever say, I am sick. We ought to be filled with wonder and amazement at the goodness of the Creator towards a rebellious race.

But soon the Conqueror is coming to destroy the great leader of the rebellion, with all his hosts. He is mighty to save, on conditions that man cease his rebellion, and obey him; and thus become a member of the immortal race to fufill the design of the Creator.

ON FORGIVENESS.

The most plain and natural sentiments of equity concur with divine authority to enforce the duty of forgiveness. Let him who has never in his life done wrong be allowed the privilege of remaining inexorable. But let such as are conscious of frailties and crimes consider forgiveness as a debt which they owe to others. Common failings are the strongest lessons of mutual forbearance. Were this virtue unknown among men, order and comfort, peace and repose, would be strangers to human life.

Injuries retaliated according to the exorbitant measure which passion prescribes would excite resentment in return. The injured person would become the injurer; and thus wrongs, retaliation and fresh injuries would circulate in endless succession, till the world was rendered a field of blood. Of all the passions which invade the human breast, revenge is the most direful. When allowed to reign with full dominion, it is more than sufficient to poison the few pleasures which remain to man in his present state.

How muchsoever a person may suffer from injustice, he is always in hazard of suffering more from the prosecution of revenge. The violence of an enemy cannot inflict what is equal to the torment he creates to himself by means of the fierce and desperate passions which he allows to rage in his soul.

Those evil spirits who inhabit the regions of misery, are represented as delighting in revenge and cruelty. But all that is great and good in the universe, is on the side of clemency and mercy. The almighty Ruler of the world though for ages offended by the unrighteousness, and insulted by the impiety of men, is "long-suffering and slow to anger." His Son, when he appeared in our nature, exhibited, both in his life and death, the most illustrious example of forgiveness which the world ever beheld.

If we look into the history of mankind, we shall find that, in every age, they who have been respected as worthy, or admired as great, have been distinguished for this virtue. Revenge dwells in little minds. A maguanimous spirit is always superior to it. It suffers not from the injuries of men those severe shocks which others feel. Collected within itself, it stands unmoved by their impotent assaults; and with generous pity, rather than with anger, looks down on their unworthy conduct. It has been truly said that the greatest man on earth can no sooner commit an injury, than a good man can make himself greater by forgiving it.—Sel. by Thomas Foote.

"THE SON OF MAN."

It is worthy of note, that, with one exception (Acts 7: 56), our Lord only speaks of himself as the Son of man." It is a term used by none of the apostles, but fifty different times by Jesus himself, as if it was the favorite title by which he would designate himself. It is a name which the prophet Daniel (7: 13) gives the Messiah, and hence was a name recognized by the Jews as a designation of the Messiah. As the phrase "Son of God" when applied to Jesus, meant the full and perfect communication to him of the divine nature, with all its attributes and functions, so that we could truly say as St. Paul does, "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the God-head bodily," so the phrase "Son of man," when used by him, indicated the full and perfect communication to him of the human nature, with all its attributes and functions, sin only excepted, so that he is indeed "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven."

In his human nature he was "made of a woman—made under the law," "for verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham, wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren," and he was therefore made in the likeness of man. It is a term that thus identifies Christ with the men whom he came to save. He has taken to himself our humanity. He has exalted and glorified it, and brought us into the light and liberty of the children of God; while it also shows that, as the "Son of man," he was the highest and fullest embodiment of humanity—man without sin—man perfectly holy—man with no physical defect, no mental idiosyncracies, no class, national, or religious prejudices;—a man in the full, rounded and complete development of all his mental and moral powers, incorporating in himself all the glories and perfections of a sinless and unfallen manhood; the ideal of what man would have been had he not sinned; the pattern of what man ought to be on earth;—the type of what man will be in the heavenly regeneration.—Bishop Stevens.

REAPING.

The avocations of agricultural life furnish illustrations of the highest spiritual truth. Men sow that they may reap; and in the natural world the sowing is the period of toil and of trouble, while the reaping is the time of joy and reward. But the gladness of the harvest depends upon the character of the seed sown. The man who would sow his field with thorns, would find that tedious as the the sowing might be, the harvest would be far worse.

Our Savior likens the dissemination of his Word to the scattering of seed by the sower's hand; and the ultimate results are seen in the great ingathering day, in the harvest which is the end of the age. The man who fills his soil with noxious weeds may vainly hope to gather precious fruits, and he who devotes a life to sinful courses, may be insane enough to anticipate a harvest of blessing, but he will never be fortunate enough to realize it. Said the wise man, "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity." Prov. 22: 8. Said Eliphaz: "They that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the the same." Job 4: 8. Said the prophet Hosea, "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind." Hosea 8: 7. And he exhorts the people to sow to themselves in righteousness, that they may reap in mercy. Hosea 10: 12.

The apostle bids us to remember that "he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Cor. 9: 6), and he charges us not to be deceived, and tells us that "God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. And let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." Gal. 6: 7, 9.

We are all sowing; day by day, and hour by hour we scatter seeds for good or ill. Words of kindness, acts of love, duties done and crosses borne for Jesus's sake, all these, like good seeds, shall bring forth precious fruit. On the other hand, if we sow the seeds of passion and folly, of sinfulfulness and vanity, of lust and pride, the harvest is sure to come. The day of God will dawn; the secrets of the human heart will be made manifest; that which has been done in the darkness will be revealed in the light; that which has been whispered in the ear shall be told upon the house-top; they who have sown in tears the precious seed of God, shall reap their harvest in joy; and those who have lived the life of sin and folly shall meet at last the fearful reward of their doings.

"Sown in the darkness or sown in the light,
Sown in our weakness or sown in our might,
Gathered in time or eternity,
Sure, ah! sure, will the harvest be."

—The Common People.

THIS SAME JESUS.

CYNTHIA MESSMORE.

"And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel. Which also said, This same Jesus which was taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 10, 11.

Love to the Master is one of the grand characteristics of the disciples of Christ. When they thought that Jesus would be stoned to death in Judea, the time he went there to raise Lazarus, Thomas said, and probably his language expressed the feelings of other disciples as well as his own, "Let us also go that we may die with him." And when Peter was questioned relative to the strength of his affection, by the Lord, he exclaimed, "Thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee." Hence, the two men clothed in white apparel that stood by the disciples while they were watching their ascending Lord, spake as they did. Their words were not numerous but certainly very suggestive: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Here they are not only informed that their beloved Lord would return again to the world from heaven, but also, that he would return the same Jesus.

Erom the language—this same Jesus—we learn that the royal personage who bears the honorable title, King of kings and Lord of lords, and who will return to the earth, accompanied by myriads of angels, in power and great glory, is the same being that in his first advent entered the world in the form of a human babe; that was a friend to publicans and sinners; that took little children in his arms and blessed them; that conversed with the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well; that in the house of Simon permitted Mary to wash his feet with her tears and to wipe them with her hair; that was baptized by John in Jordan; that went about doing good, instructing the ignorant, pardoning the guilty, healing the sick, raising the dead, and comforting the distressed.

His separation from the world, and his exalted position in heaven, at the right hand of the Father, will have produced no change in the character of Jesus.

When he comes "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," he will be the same Jesus that wept at the grave of Lazarus, and over the doomed city of Jerusalem, and that welcomed the heavy-laden to him, and refreshed them with his free and pardoning grace. Ages spent in the heavenly mansions and in the society of angels, by whom he will have been worshiped and adored, will not detract in the least from any of those traits of character which made our Lord, when on earth, the approachable friend and the reliable Savior.

This same Jesus is the Son of man still, in all his glory and majesty. Joseph is classed among the types of our Lord. The story of his exaltation in Egypt is highly suggestive, and supersedes the necessity of any tales of fiction to paint the strength of a brother's love, under the most severe trials and temptations. "A brother is born for adversity." Ps. 17: 17. Such a brother was Joseph, and such also was the Lord Jesus.

From the condition of a prisoner, Joseph was raised to a position in Egypt, but little below that of the king himself. "And Pharaoh took off his ring from his hand, and arrayed him in vestures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck; and he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had; and they cried before him, Bow the knee; and he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt." Gen. 61: 42–45.

Such was the high degree of honor to which Joseph was promoted. But as his disciples were those of genuine piety, they preserved him from vanity and revenge, though he had strong temptations to these dangers. Neither the unkind treatment which he received from his brethren nor the distinguished honors which he received from Pharaoh could chill the flow of brotherly affection that coursed through his tender heart. Whether there is anything really typical in this part of Joseph's history or not, it is suggestive. He was still the faithful brother born for adversity, though exalted to the honors of a prince.

So with our blessed Lord. Though he has gone far up into the heavens, and received a name above every name,

"His tender heart is still the same,
And melts at human woe."

As it will be the same Jesus that will come in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, that the disciples saw taken from them in a cloud, and that was with them all the time of his public ministry, performing the duties of the most devoted friend, and the work of an all-sufficient Savior, instructing the ignorant and pardoning the guilty; so it is the same Jesus that now occupies the mediatorial throne, and who still lives to save, that once was here on earth, and who endeared so many to him by the miracles of mercy which he wrought, and by the words of eternal life which he taught. While everything around us changes, he changes not. He still "hates iniquity" and "loves righteousness." In the light of the unchangeableness of our Redeemer what encouragement we all have to confide in him. "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

FULNESS OF BREAD.

"Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy."—EZEK. 16: 49.

Some of the special sins of Sodom, for which God sent special typical judgments upon it, are presented in this text. Peter says of this judgment that God made it "an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly; and delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked."

This testimony proves that some class of wicked people, future from Sodom's destruction, will be guilty of like sins, and be overthrown in like manner. Jesus testifies who will be thus guilty, and the time when the like judgment will be poured upon them. He says, "But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Luke 17: 29, 30.

The proof is very positive, therefore, that Sodom's sins and judgment will be manifested in antitype at the second advent of Christ. The sins of Sodom, specified in the sacred History, must be duplicated by the people of the generation living when Christ appears, and will therefore become signs of his approach.

As a fulness of bread was one of the evidences of their deep-stained iniquity, which caused God's wrath to be poured in consuming flames upon them, we inquire, Is the same sin chargeable upon this generation?

The sin of the Sodomites was not that they had been diligent in lawful business, which they had transacted justly and equitably, until the blessings of this life had accumulated in great abundance in their store-houses and treasuries; it was not that the surrounding countries were fertile, teeming with industrious classes, producing great quantities of provisions and articles of merchandise; nor that the Lord had plentifully scattered his sunbeams and abundant showers in the fruitage seasons; but it was that in the midst of plenty "the hands of the poor and needy" were not "strengthened."

God had given them fruitful seasons and great prosperity, so that they had pulled down their barns and built greater, and reckoned that future supplies were certain, which caused them to sit down in "idleness," wickedly feasting upon their superabundance.

They were not the laboring class, who by the sweat of their brow had produced the bread, but they were the city speculators, who had by extortion heaped up the fruits of the soil, and taken it out of the hands of the poor laborers, demanding prices altogether above the wages they were willing to pay. The fires were not kindled around the farm-buildings and mechanic-shops of the scattered, toiling millions, but around the stately mansions of the princely merchants and vast store-houses of the oppressive aristocracy. The rulers enacted laws helping the rich to become richer, and driving the poor into deeper poverty.

All the gold, silver, wheat, corn, sheep and cattle are the Lord's, and he, as a bountiful Father, provides enough for his creatures when it is righteously distributed according to his revealed will. His anger burns against the oppressors of his poor, those who defraud them of their equitable share in heaven's bounties, sent for the good of all.

If an earthly father should leave his home, providing abundant supplies for his six children until his return, and should learn that two of them being stronger, more cunning and artful than their brethren, had gathered up nearly all the father had left, and were wasting it upon their wicked lusts, while their defrauded brothers and sisters were suffering with squalid poverty, and pleading piteously to be delivered from starvation, would he not be indignant at the oppressors, and severely punish them, giving to his suffering children their portion of meat? He would be unworthy of the title father if he would not do this. This was one of the specified sins of Sodom; and for this reason with others were the Sodomites destroyed.

This same kind of financial oppression will greatly increase in the last days, and become a crying sin with the last generation. The Psalmist says, "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Ps. 92: 7. The wicked will have great financial prosperity just before the end. Ezekiel evidently foretells the same thing, which was typically foreshadowed in the destruction of Jerusalem, when he says:

"The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof." "They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed; their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels: because it is the stumbling-block of their ininquity." Ezek. 7: 12, 19.

The Jews stumbled just as did the Sodomites, over the mammon of unrighteousness—their wicked manner of obtaining and using wealth. The Scriptures present both classes as ensamples of the rich of the last generation. Zephaniah takes up the strain as follows: "Howl, ye inhabitants of Maktesh, for all the merchant-people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off." Zeph. 1: 11. James quotes this passage, explains its meaning, and applies it very definitely. He says of the rich, "Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." Here is the "fulness of bread," or earthly "treasure" as represented in Sodom. The treasures are "heaped together;" that is, they have rapidly accumulated and concentrated in the hands of few. The particular wickedness of this accumulation or fulness is then presented, by showing that while one class has grown rapidly rich, another class has grown distressingly poor. The poor, he states, are the laborers; the producing class who have labored for the rich in reaping down their fields. He then expresses the particular item of conduct in which lay the great sin which had produced the poverty in one class and the abounding riches of the other class: viz., the poor had been "robbed" of their equitable wages or "hire" which had been "kept back by fraud;" that is, the laborers had not received a just proportion of the profits of their toil. This is exactly the sin of Sodom;—one class enjoying a superabundance, while an other class were suffering poverty. For such a sin God brought his fiery wrath upon the Sodomites, and for the same sin will bring a like judgment upon the last generation.

The question now comes home to us with great force, Is this generation committing the sin of Sodom? Is one class heaing up and wickedly squandering earthly goods, while another class are growing poorer, and suffering for the hoarded treasures which are wickedly kept back from the enjoyment of the working class?

Just such a state of things exists to-day. It is a fact that the employers and employed are drifting rapidly farther and farther apart; the rich becoming more oppressive, and less sympathetic for their laborers, and the employed becoming poorer, and their absolute wants causing them to plead piteously for labor and higher wages.

This cry is now sounding one of the most thrilling notes ever heard from human lips. More than half of the human race—the producing classes—are now living on a small fraction of what they have produced by their own sweat, while the rich, who never soiled their hands to produce this bread, have heaped it up far beyond the reach of the poor.

Why do we hear this loud and universal cry of "hard times"? Why are there so many women and children suffering with cold and hunger? Is it because God has caused the earth to fail to yield her increase? Is it because there can be found no more of the precious metals to supply the medium of exchanges? No. There never were larger supplies of bread than now; and the wool and flax were never more abundant.

The vaults of the precious ores groan under the increasing weight of the golden treasures.

This want and poverty comes from the fact that the "bread" is not properly and righteously distributed. It is the sin of Sodom, because it is found in such "fulness" with the rich, while there is such a scarcity with the poor. There never was a time when there was a greater contrast between the two classes, connected with the professed church, than there is at present. The rich are expending their millions in extravagant dwellings, churches, costly apparel, gorgeous equipage, sumptuous living, gluttonous feasts, wine-bibbing and general wastefulness; while the poor are ground between the millstones of small wages or no work, and oppressive taxes and general oppression. These stones are grinding finer every year, until the plaintive cry of want sounds at every corner. But who would think that squalid poverty is wringing the hearts of millions in the lanes, cellars and garrets of our cities, when they walk the broad streets where fashionable society waves its plumage, flashes its diamonds, and flaunts its silks?

This is not the condition of a single city, State or nation, but of the whole world. The cries of Sodom sound from all the zones between the poles, and calls for the vengeance of an insulted God.

"EARNEST WORDS FOR HONEST SKEPTICS," by Mrs. H. V. Reed, is the title of a new and valuable book just issued. It is one of those books that should be read by every one who wishes to be established in the truth. The objections raised by "honest skeptics" against the Bible and Christianity are fairly and successfully met with candor and facts, making the work one of special value to all who are seeking after truth.

M. G.

A FEW EARNEST WORDS.

We wish to utter a few earnest words of warning to our friends. The season of festivity is approaching, and as usual, comes simultaneously with the period, understood to be specially opportune for revival effort in all the churches. The note of preparation is heard, and in many instances the blessed work has commenced. But in a very large number of places the revival arrangements are set aside, in view of getting ready for some fair, festival, or exhibition, to make up the pastor's salary, meet the current expenses of the church, pay some debt contracted by the congregation, or to replenish the Sabbath-school library, etc., etc. All of these doubtless are worthy and commendable objects. It is however only the mode of seeking to accomplish them, that we wish to refer to, and concerning which, we feel compelled to speak out our mind. We do this at the risk of being misapprehended, and pronounced censorious and oldfogyish. It must not be understood however that we fail to appreciate the good designs of persons who engage in the operations referred to. But we most seriously object to this method of accomplishing the end contemplated. We give a few of the reasons why we think the policy of holding fairs and festivals, etc., etc., should be abandoned.

First of all it is calculated to damage us and our cause in the estimation of the world. Sometimes it is called a "worldly policy." But this is a complete misnomer. The world never acts so unwisely. Neither in business nor any other matter, does the world adopt such a method of proclaiming its weakness and bankruptcy. To conduct any mercantile or mechanical operations on such principles would be ruinous to all who would make the attempt. It is a shameless proclamation of our imbecility, and declares to the world that there is not strength of character and principle among us to meet our acknowledged and equitable obligations, unless we are prompted thereto by some hope of gain or opportunity of indulgence.

We admit we ought to support the ministry, take care of the aged and the poor, and do all that is contemplated. But is it not humiliating to be compelled to acknowledge, that the only way in which we can be induced to meet our obligations in these matters, is to give us a chance to gormandize or to make a dollar by a grab bag, lottery, or some other of the many schemes adopted to "raise money?" It may be true that such a necessity exists, but we do not believe it. Yet even if it were true, we protest against the practice of thus proclaiming our folly and weakness to the world.

In the next place, we object to such modes of procuring funds for religious purposes, because of the injury done to those actively engaged in carrying them forward. The little unworthy bickerings, bitterness, envy, strife and jealousy, connected with all such things, are alas, too well known. Such is the deleterious effect in a church or Sabbath school where they are in operation, that all idea of revival or soul-saving, for the time, must be completely set aside. The mind is unfitted for devotion, and all those who are long in contact with such influences, experience leanness and barrenness of soul. The frivolity incident to such occasions, cannot be indulged in, without the most serious loss of spirituality. We are persuaded that all the means needed for the promotion of the work of God, can be readily secured by the true and scriptural method of voluntary contributions. We earnestly wish that the experiment might be fully and fairly tried.—Christian Standard.

We commend the sentiments expressed above as an important warning, which needs to be often repeated, and all these evil influences and ruinous results constantly kept before the eye of the church. Church fairs and christianized gambling are located in the broad way to death. Let all the professed followers of Christ take heed to their ways when they find themselves in sympathy with them, and turn their feet immediately into the narrow path, where such foolish festivities are unknown.—ED.

A CURIOSITY.

"While we are watching the movements of European States, the following prophecy, made in 1453, when Constantinople was taken by the Turks, may be of interest.

In twice two hundred years the Bear
The Crescent shall assail;
But if the Cock and Bull shall pair,
The Bear shall not prevail.
But look in twice ten years again;
Let Islam know and fear,
The Cross shall wax, the Crescent wane,
Grow pale and disappear.

It is exactly twice ten years since the end of the Crimean war."

We clip the above from the Independant Statesman, Concord, N. H., not as containing any divine authority for the events indicated, but as a very singular unique production. It was evidently written a long time ago, if not at the taking of Constantinople; for many writers have referred to it as an old prophecy. It is a curious incident that in just twice two hundred years from the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, the Bear—Russia—should assail the Crescent—make war on Turkey—and that the Cock—France—and the Bull—England—should pair—unite in opposition to Russia—which did prevent Russia from taking the city.

That defeat happened, and the war ended in 1856. It is now just twice ten years since it was decided that Russia could not dislodge the Turks from the coveted city. Russia or the cross is now gathering a mighty army to attack the crescent once more, when it is quite certain that France and England cannot "pair" to defeat the great Gog.

THE SITUATION.

The political situation of this country is very critical. The wisest statesmen are at their wits' ends. It is quite probable that on the 4th of next March there will be two persons claiming the Presidential seat, with no satisfactory means of deciding which shall occupy the honored position. The feeling is so intense, the charges of fraud so boldly made against each party, that very serious results may be expected. A revolution in this government may take place in a few months. The breaking up of the present order of things seems to be near at hand. The "distress of nations with perplexity" must come between the present hour and the appearing of Jesus. That his coming is very near is shown most clearly by the fulfillment of prophecy. All who expect to be ready for the grand event should make immediate preparation, if any thing is lacking. Lay all at the feet of Jesus, without reserve, and follow him as perfectly as possible.

M. G.

WAR IN EUROPE.

At present there is scarcely any doubt but that Russia has fully decided to go to war with Turkey. Both parties are making great preparations for the bloody conflict. To the prophetic student, the present hour is one of most thrilling interest, even without a parellel in the christian dispensation, because he has reason to believe that the closing drama of the present dispensation is at hand. The conviction is gaining ground very rapidly among the devoted men and women in all churches, that we are truly living in the "last days," and that Christ will soon make his second advent to this earth.

The time has come for all who wish to be at "the marriage supper of the Lamb," to be fully clothed with the spotless robe of purity, provided by the coming Bridegroom King. Nothing short of a pure heart will fit one for an entrance to that heavenly feast. That company will be of a very select character, without any respect to talent, wealth, social position, color or caste; but it will consist of all who have a clean heart, out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people. Holiness will be the essential qualification for admission. Let us keep in mind the divine saying: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12: 14.

A NEW BIBLE AID.

Eld. Rufus Wendell, of East Albany, N. Y., has produced a glorious and valuable book,—glorious because founded on and built of Holy Scripture; valuable because every Bible student wants it. I can readily class the work along with Cruden's Concordance. As Cruden counted the words, so with rare patience Wendell has counted the "Speeches of the New Testament," with the words they contain, and having done this he has also arranged them in numerical order, with a harmony, and chronology.

There are 620 speeches of our Lord, containing 39,532 words. Then comes the Addresses to our Lord, numbering 331, composed of 4816 words. Did any one ever note these before? Then the Miscellaneous Speeches, 495 in all, having 16,618 words. This is followed by the Chronological Harmony, the Speeches in the Acts, and also in the Apocalypse. There is also the number of words in the entire New Testament given verbatim, also an Index appended to the whole.

The enumerations, the quotations, the figures, etc., must have required great research and labor; rare accuracy, perfect arrangement is apparent, the type is beautiful, and the binding equally so. Every marginal reading is given, every text is classified, every speech numbered. The volume is fresh, novel and original, and I am sure that no clergyman or Sunday-school teacher can afford to be without it. The The book will quicken memory, suggest topics, and furnish to all an important Bible aid. It is an 8 vo, price $2.50. The author is publisher.

BRIEFS.—NO. 3.

E. A. STOCKMAN.

This world has never been so intensely agitated in regard to the events of the immediate future as at present. The anxiety is universal. Thinking minds in all lands are sorely perplexed. A state of things has arisen which, in many respects, is without a parallel in our world's history. The feeling is general that we have reached an important epoch, and may expect startling events. How significant are our Lord's words just now, "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

Those who believe in the Bible, and recognize the Divine Hand in the affairs of earth, naturally turn to their religious instructors for the desired knowledge of where we are in the progress of human events, and what we are to look for.

The Bible sheds clear and unerring light along the whole line of earth's history, and describes with inspired minuteness the condition of the nations, and the particular order of events that would mark the near approach of the end of all things.

The students and interpreters of the Holy Word are, therefore, rightfully expected to be able to explain, from inspired standpoints, the meaning of the present times and the nature of coming events.

Amid the thickening gloom we listen for the voice of the pulpit to expound to us, as in Christ's stead, the Divine Oracles, in explanation of the strange scenes transpiring in all the world, and what will be "the end of these wonders." But how saddening the disappointment! How humiliating the attitude of the great Protestant Evangelical ministry at this solemn hour! Instead of light they increase the darkness, and seem determined to bury in mysticism all God has said concerning the return of his Son to our world.

It is true, and with joy we record it, there are a few able and distinguished ministers, scattered through the great denominations, who see clearly by the light of the prophetic word where we are and what is coming, and are faithfully and effectively warning the people of impending doom. But the great body of the clergy are, as they have been for the last thirty years, bitterly hostile to the whole subject of Christ's second advent. When forced to preach on this subject by the pressing inquiries of their people, they seek to allay the awakened apprehensions of their congregations by assuring them that prophecy cannot be understood, that the coming of Christ is not a proper subject of inquiry, and that the end of the world is thousands, and perhaps millions of years in the future.

We witnessed a painful illustration of what we have stated at a Pastor's meeting held in Boston a few days since. The announcement in the papers that the subject of Christ's second advent would be discussed, drew together a large attendance, mostly ministers.

The Bro. appointed to open the discussion reported sick, but the subject was taken up and occupied nearly the whole session. The speaking was all on one side, and the views advanced were most extraordinary. We thought we had heard strange interpretations before, but the positions taken there, were, to us, perfectly amazing. Such startling perversions of the Word of God we were not prepared to expect from any body of evangelical ministers. We had no means of taking notes, but will give a few examples from memory.

The first and chief speaker said that he had come to the definite conclusion that the New Testament contains no sign, omen, or prognosis, whatever, of Christ's second advent; and that the church is excluded from any inquiry concerning the time of his coming; that nothing can be known, definitely or proximately, of the nearness of the end. This view was urged by quite a lengthy argument. We wondered how any man could make that statement who had ever read Christ's words. Luke 21: 25–27.

Another speaker affirmed that Christ purposely and carefully concealed the period of his return in doubt and obscurity, but he thought the apostles knew something about it; and this, in his mind, was a very great difficulty.

Another said that the close study of the subject of Christ's coming tends to unbalance the mind and often ends in insanity; and he related several incidents illustrating this statement, which created considerable merriment, with frequent outbursts of laughter.

All this was very painful to us, and we could not repress the mental question, Is this a body of divinely appointed interpreters of God's Holy Word?

"If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take his part out of the book of life."

Several distinguished ministers, members of the association, were present, who have been often reported as decided Adventists, but they were silent.

Some of us have been cherishing the hope that the great Bible truth of Christ's personal, speedy advent was coming to be more favorably regarded by the popular ministry, but we may as well dismiss from our minds the expectation that this great doctrine and message has anything to hope for from the ministry, as a body, but unfriendly criticism or open hostility.

Is it any wonder that Christendom to-day is worldly, proud, blind, and doctrinally apostate, in view of such interpretations as we have cited? How is it possible for us to unite with such interpreters?

But so it was at the first advent, and so Christ has assured us it would be at the second coming. Let us take heart and press the truth with renewed fidelity and vigor till the Master comes to judge and punish evil servants, and to reward the faithful.

Meantime, let us not fail to extend to the few who are standing out in manly defence of the truth our warmest sympathy and prayers, for fierce opposition awaits them.

PREACHING FOR A SALARY!!!

I. C. WELLCOME.

Is it right for the ministers of Christ's gospel to claim a certain price for their time and ministerial labors?

This question is often discussed, and has been many times answered in the negative. Some good people are almost horror-stricken when they hear others consent that it is right for a minister to state the sum for which he will preach. We are not about to raise a tempest on that point; we have preached twenty-eight years, and never allowed the thought to take root that we must have a salary or not preach; but have earned much the largest part of our support with our own hands. Many others have done the same. This we can do cheerfully. But we have learned that there are ways with ministers and with laymen quite as inconsistent as bidding for, or paying a salary.

Some ministers who have come to cry loudly against stating a salary for which they will preach, yet, so manage as not to spend their time and labors with churches, or societies, where the people do not give them enough to supply a good living for their families. Is not this as great a crime as to stipulate a salary, and refuse to preach without it? Who shall feed the small flocks, the poor flocks, and the backslidden, stingy flocks? Who shall go into "the regions beyond," where no able and willing hearts are known to be ready to give a full support to a preacher? The man who has a salary pledged, has but "little faith" in God for his "daily bread." The man who does not "go out into the high ways and hedges and compel them to come in" because there is no company of brethren nor committee from whom he reasonably expects a full support, does not manifest much faith by his works. The men who have a missionary board, a committee, or the promise of support from able brethren, may have faith in these backers, and do good if they preach the gospel faithfully; but is it not equivalent to a salary?

Who is it that exercises real faith in God, this class of preachers, or those who go out among the poor, and destitute, and scattered ones, without pledges, promise, or human prospect of money, and trusting the promises of God, publishes the gospel of Christ to all who will hear? The latter are the men of real faith, or the highest degree of faith, and through them the Lord feeds many of the famishing sheep and lambs who are not looked after by those who look for their support first and for the sheep crib afterward. And through these men many sinners are gathered from "the highways and hedges" where other sphepherds never go for them. Let us "go out quickly, and bring in the poor, the maimed, the halt and the blind. The Master is coming to the marriage supper soon.

CORRECTION.—In the Crisis of Dec. 7th, under the caption "Another Impostor," it was stated that Bro. Hastings never saw the man who calls himself Father Francis. The statement should have been that he never saw him but once; in other respects the record is correct.—ED.

REQUEST.

Will all the dear saints of God sincerely ask the Lord to restore my eyesight? The prayer of faith will save the sick. Please bear my case to the throne of grace.

P. TANDY.

DO NOT fear the frown of the world. When a blind man comes against you in the street you are not angry at him; you say, "He is blind, poor man, or he would not have hurt me." So you may say of poor worldlings when they speak evil of christians.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of Two THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

NOTES BY THE WAY IN ARKANSAS.—NO. 1.

J. A. CARGILE.

To THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brn.:—After having a blessed little meeting in my own cottage home on the evening of the 14th, when Bro. James Anderson (Methodist) spoke to us, I started at midnight for this western country.

I stopped over the 15th in Nashville, Tenn., and spent the day with Col. M. R. Grigsby and his pleasant family. I visited the office of Gen. J. W. Thomas, the gentlemanly, christian hearted superintendent of the N. C., and St. L. Railway, who very kindly gave me a half-fare ticket over his popular road to Union City.

From Columbus, Ky., to Little Rock, I came over the great Iron Mountain route. I have travelled on many roads in the south, but I must say this route is the best of all. The politeness of conductors and all others in the employ of these roads over which I came is enough, alone, to induce any one to prefer this route. And they have given me reduced fare too. While on the other route I have never received a favor only for my money. And in view of the dangers of the Memphis and Little Rock Road, which is many miles through the swamps over high rotten trestles, I say to every body coming West by Chattanooga, be sure to get your ticket over the celebrated Iron Mountain route.

I left Nashville, Tenn., the 15th, and reached Newport, Jackson Co., Ark., on the 16th, and rested over till the 18th, with a very kind family, Mr. J. K. Huddieston's.

Sunday, the 19th, spoke to a good attentive crowd in the academy. Monday, the 20th, spoke at Beard's church. Tuesday evening I spoke in the academy, and Wednesday in the private dwelling of Sr. Huff, and at 7, again in Edmonds Hall. Thursday I spoke in the evening at the Hall again, and Friday evening at Cypress Church. I spoke at 3 P. M. at Beard's church, then heard the Methodist brethren that night. I love them and did really enjoy the Lord's supper.

Here is the place of the hardest trials of my life, where, in order to refute the truth, the ministry have, by correspondence with Dr. E. A. S., of my country, tried to ruin my private character. But the people prove by their actions that they know the right and will condemn the wrong. I must say, however, that Dr. Scarboro has prosecuted the guilty party before their conference, but I do not know the decision. I hope they will do good for evil, and forgive him. I love him in spite of all he has done or may do.

The dear Brn. and Srs. around De View have had to bear much since I left them last year. I learned that for six months after I left, every sermon had immortal soulism in it. The champion of the dogma (Bro. Bridges) was quiet as a lamb when I was here last year preaching the sleep of the dead. But after I left, I learn that he made war on us. A sister told me that he held up a copy of my reply to Dr. Newton and said, "Here is Cargile's own translation, and it is not according to Scripture." Why did he not tell me about it.

Monday, 27th, Mr. Beard took me back to Newport, where I delivered the first discourse ever delivered there on our views. The crowd was very attentive, and I hope good was done. I left at 10.45, and reached Little Rock at 2.40. I found Bro. David Young and wife in this city, both glad to see me, and I am resting pleasantly with them, awaiting an opening to speak. This is a pleasant, beautiful country and city; and Bro. Young is very anxious that our Brn. call as often as they can to preach the truth here. They will always find a welcome home with him. I go from here to Fort Smith. Pray for me while in the field, and for my loved ones at home.

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 28th, 1876.

GET at the root of things. The gold mines of Scripture are not in the top soil, you must open a shaft; the precious diamonds of experience are not picked up in the roadway, their secret places are far down. Get down into the vitality, the solidity, the veracity, the divinity of the Word of God, and seek to possess with it the inward work of the Spirit.

LETTER FROM BRO. P. G. BOWMAN.

Dear Bro. Couch:—When I returned from the North last month, I intended writing out a short account of my trip, the six Conference Meetings I attended, what I saw, and heard, and felt, while in the States, and then my first trip out of the United States, among the saints of the Lord in Canada, together with the wonder of wonders in Philadelphia, the great Centennial. I suppose something of this kind would have been interesting, particularly to our people and friends at the south. But on my arrival at home I found the dark waters of political strife rolling in such dreadful commotion as to threaten everything with universal desolation. I therefore thought my best plan would be to go among the people and try and throw a little oil upon the troubled waves. So I went from house to house, and appointed a series of two days meetings at our churches, and we had throughout the State a day of fasting and prayer.

I sounded the gospel clarion loud and shrill, counselling everywhere the utmost moderation in feeling, word and action. And now I give devout thanks to Almighty God that the election is past, and there was not a drop of blood shed, because there was not a drop of spirits sold or drank throughout the entire state.

But even now I perceive the whole country is in a terrible state of excitation, and a single act here or elsewhere, may start a ball, increasing in magnitude with every revolution, until North and South, East and West may be thrown into anarchy, utter anarchy, Mexican anarchy. "These be the days of vengeance," because they are the days of will worship, of man worship, of hero worship, and cursed is he who putteth his trust in an arm of flesh.

The foundations of this old, shaky, crazy world are all out of place. It is reeling about like a drunken man, and that is the cause of all the present trouble, from the centre of Asia to the utmost extremity of its surface.

"Who will show us any good?" is the universal inquiry. This party, or that party, this man, or that man, this nation or that, is the almost universal reply. Some few say God will help us. What sort of a God? Why, the God of nature! But the God of nature is a God beyond us. Well, then, says another, the God of providence will help the world out of its difficulty; but the God of providence is a God above us, we cannot find him. Why not lay aside everything outside of the Bible (which is a direct revelation from the one true and living God)? Here you will find the world Catholicon, here you will find God in the Christ which is God for us, God with us, and God within us, for "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. The Christ in you (all true believers) the hope of glory. Which hope is as an "anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast, and reacheth to that within the vail, whither the forerunner for us hath entered; and whosoever hath this hope purifieth himself even as he is pure."

Here is rock bottom; here we can stand and rejoice in hope of the glory of God; for "the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him; then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." And now will commence a state of purification which will result in the establishment of the Christ's universe and everlasting kingdom. Then, and not until then, will there be peace and good will, because then all things that offend will be cast out. O! what scenes of horror will then take place. All old things will be done away, Gentileism with all its terrible systems of idolatry and corruption; Judaism with its infidelity; Church establishments with their multiform creeds and opinions, all political governments, in a word, everything which has come down from Eden lost to the burning day, and which has not had the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God for its foundation, will pass forever under the dark waves of eternal oblivion. And with these will go down all the wicked of our race; and as they sink under the flames and fumes of hell fire, O! what howls and shrieks, what criminations and recriminations, between kings and subjects, preachers and people, husbands and wives, employees and laborers, friends and neighbors, parents and children, charging each the other with their eternal damnation!

What mind can imagine the scenes of horror that will take place when a holy God will come to a final settlement with unnumbered millions of the human race, for their conduct towards him and one another for six thousand long years? And now, when every evil of every kind shall be forever exterminated from God's universe, and the new heavens and the new earth fitted up for the everlasting abode of the redeemed of every age and clime, who having been resurrected and translated before the dreadful day of God, shall come down with their Savior and king to take possession of their eternal home; and then O! what meetings and greetings among those who have loved amid the sorrows of this mortal life! Now, thank God, their troubles and trials are over forever. Now what a king! Too good to do wrong; too wise to make a mistake; and what subjects! Immortal in their nature, and consequently can never suffer again. And while the tidal waves of glory shall forever roll over, and fill a purified universe, everything that the blessed inhabitants shall smell, feel, taste and see, shall fill them with such extatic joy, that they shall forever rise higher and shout louder, "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! Heaven anp earth are full of thy glory!" Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Amen.

Sinner, oh, sinner, turn, oh, turn, and seek the salvation of your poor soul before it is forever too late. Hypocrite and false professor, turn quick, and lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset you, and seek the Lord now while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near. O! all out of Christ, rich and poor, old and young, male and female, fly, fly speedily from the gathering, horrible, devouring storm of God Almighty's wrath.

And ye, children of Zion, lift up your heads for your redemption draws nigh. Jesus will soon be here, and then it will be things to come forever and ever, and all through the cycles of eternity it will be better and better, and still better things to come. God bless and save us all. Pray for me and mine.

A MAN'S conduct is only a picture book of his creed. He acts after what he believes.

Correspondence.

From Bro. W. Johnson.

To the waiting ones scattered abroad:—As my heart is greatly cheered by reading your letters from week to week in the Crisis, I thought I would like to tell you I am waiting, hoping, praying for Messiah's glorious reign. Right and truth will triumph then. Now the world is full of suffering. What a blessed change it will be when he shall come. Now his children, many of them, are homeless and crying for bread. Behold what a change! He has bought them a mansion, their rags are exchanged for robes of righteousness, a crown for each one. We are to have life more abundantly. Yes, we shall inherit the earth; the earth is the saint's portion.

Then we will not hear the sound of crying or pain, for God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes. Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them. There shall be no more curse, but the throne of the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him; and they shall see his face, and his name be in their foreheads; they shall reign forever and ever." Oh! that those we love, those who are near to us would accept Christ as their Savior, and claim a mansion there. Whosoever will, let him come. These sayings are faithful and true. Amen, Come, Lord Jesus.

With these truths before us how could any one who claims to be a minister of God say, as I heard one say, that the place of the saints' abode was not revealed, but he believed it to be somewhere in God's universe. Blind indeed! May God open his eyes. There is a long line of witnesses from Genesis to Revelation. I often wish I could meet with some of the waiting ones and enjoy some of the good meetings. Dear ones, pray for me that I may have part in the meeting that shall never end. May the love of the Father and his Son dwell richly in all our hearts.

West Burlington, Pa.

From Bro. D. R. Moore.

Dear Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad:—I have often found the reading of your articles in the Crisis a source of great joy to me, and wish to address a few lines to you, that Father's children may know that they have a brother away on the hills of northern Pa., who is in sympathy with them; one who is looking for the return of "that same Jesus," and the establishment of the fifth monarchy, or everlasting kingdom spoken of by the prophet.

Brethren, though the days look dark, and hope seems deferred, yet, let us remember the advice of the apostle who says, "cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward; for ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. In due time ye shall reap if ye faint not.

I think the evidence is clear that the reaping time is but just ahead. O let patience have her perfect work, that ye may all be of one mind. I have sometimes seen the term "hobby" applied to the sentiments of honest brethren, which is painful to me. If my brother honestly differs from me, it will do me no good, nor make us love each other any better, for me to apply to him or his views, opprobrious epithets. No, rather let us each "speak the truth in love," that brotherly love may continue till the King comes. There are a few in this section who are still looking for the return of the Nobleman. Pray for us, that our faith fail not.

Obituaries

PARISH. In Lawrence, Mass., Nov. 19th, 1876, at the residence of Bro. James Motherwell, Mrs. Rachel Parish, mother of Mrs. Motherwell, in the ninety-seventh year of her age.

Sister Parish accepted Christ as her Savior about the year 1843, and was baptized by Elder I. R. Gates. Since that time she has been a constant reader of the Bible; and, as years were multiplied, her love for the words of Jesus increased. Her Bible shows the traces of constant use. The blessed hope was hers, and in conversation she would clasp her hands, lift her eyes heavenward, while upon her countenance could be seen the expression of joy, and exclaim, "I do wish the good Lord would come!"

Although aged and almost helpless, she was resigned to the Divine will. In very deed it can be said that one of the Lord's jewels, one who had been with Jesus, yea, a shock of corn fully ripe has fallen in weakness, but shall be raised in power at the revelation of Jesus Christ. When able, she was regularly found in the place of worship, esteeming very highly the ordinances of the Lord's house.

Her decease took place at the residence of Bro. M. where she has resided since the late war. During a previous sickness, while in conversation with Elder Couch, she said, "Bro. Couch, I suppose you think your doctrine new, but my father preached it before you were born." She has left children and other relatives to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as others who have no hope. The services were conducted by the writer.

DIMAN. Fell asleep in Christ at McClintockville, Venango Co., Penn., our beloved Bro. Wm. A. Diman, aged thirty-nine years, after a short illness of one week.

He got his hand hurt in coupling cars, which was the first cause, and then inflammation struck to the casing of the heart in connection with the lockjaw. He was a strong friend to the cause of truth in the oil region where he lived. But his work is done. He has left a wife and three children who mourn their loss; also a brother's widow, who has looked to him for support. May they look to the widow's God and the Father to the fatherless. We hope soon to see Bro. D. again in the morning of the resurrection. Services on the occasion by Eld. C. F. Sweet, assisted by the writer.

FILLEBROWN. In Welchville, Me., Nov. 19th, 1876, Walter Fillebrown, aged nineteen years.

Walter, like Lazarus, has received his evil things in this life. He waits for the good things when Jesus comes. His parents and friends are in a distant clime, yet Walter found father and mother and friends, who administered to the wants of the family. May the dear Lord sanctify this bereavement to the good of all. Sermon from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

JORDAN. In Norway Village, Me., Nov. 7th, 1876, Sister Ellen A. Jordan, daughter of Isaac H. and Julia A. Jordan, aged twenty years.

Some two years ago, in the revival interest in Otisfield, this family, with others, became deeply interested in the great truths of the Lord's coming, the resurrection, and the inheritance of the earth. Since that time they have tried to live as heirs of the grace of life. Sister Ellen was held in high esteem by all her friends and acquaintances. Thus, with bright hopes and joyous expectations was our sister cut down in early life.

> "Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,
> Gentle as the summer breeze,
> Pleasant as the air of evening
> When it floats among the trees.
> Yet again we hope to meet thee
> When mortality has fled,
> Then in life with joy to greet thee
> Where no farewell tear is shed."

The services were at Otisfield, Gore schoolhouse. Sermon by the writer from 2 Sam. 14: 14.

CLIFTON. In East Holderness, N. H., Nov. 7th, 1876, Sister Abba Clifton, wife of John P. Clifton, aged forty-six years.

Sister A. has for many years been a believer in the second coming of Christ. Though for the last two years she had suffered much with disease, she bore it all with much patience. She fell asleep with a full hope of a blessed resurrection when Jesus comes to make up his jewels. Sister A. leaves a companion, a dear aged mother, brothers and sisters, and near friends to mourn her loss. May they all be in readiness to meet her where parting scenes will never come. Words of comfort to the mourning friends by the writer from the 17th Psalm.

FARNUM. In North Norway, Me., Nov. 7th, 1876, Viola E. Farnum, daughter of Charles W. and Susan E. Farnum, aged seven years.

The dreadful disease diptheria has made its mark in this family, reminding us that we are still in a diseased world, where death reigns. They tried to get her to take her medicine that she might get well and play with her brother; she replied, "I can play with him by and by." She waits a resurrection to life. Sermon by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE MILITARY STRENGTH OF RUSSIA.

In the event of an outbreak of hostilities in Europe, which must be reckoned among the possibilities of the near future, everything relating to the military strength and material resources of the combatants becomes a matter of great interest. The immense population of Russia—ranging, according to different estimates, from 82,000,000 to 94,000,000, gives her a tremendous advantage in recruiting for her army. Germany has but 41,000,000; Austria and France each 36,000,000, and Great Britain 32,000,000. The Russians are a hardy people also, and have been for some years past under so rigorous a discipline that they may be regarded as a nation of soldiers.

The total of the Russian army proper, on the war footing, is 1,213,257 men. But in addition to these there are in military service 129,000 Cossacks of the Don, 200,000 Cossacks of the Orenburg and Siberian lines, and a small contingent which Finland is required to furnish, making altogether an army of 1,500,000 men.

Russia is well supplied with horses, the number being computed in 1871, at 19,266,000, or 225 to every 1000 of the population, whereas Austria has only 99. Germany 92, and France 80.

The Russian navy is in two principal divisions. The total comprises 108 men-of-war, 1477 officers and 7217 seamen. The iron-clad fleet of war comprises the powerful turret-ship, Peter the Great, eight frigates, three corvettes, 14 turret monitors and 3 floating batteries. The entire fleet now consists of 225 steam vessels, with 521 guns, and a total tonnage of 172,501. As to the direction which the Russian military movements will take the following statement is probably correct:

"The main strength of this vast military force will be concentrated at two points. The first army is already gathering about Kichiney, in the vicinity of the Pruth, which divides Bessarabia from Roumania. Across this river her forces will sweep down through Roumania into Bulgaria, threatening Constantinople on the left. To meet this force the Turks are about concentrating 200,000 men in Bulgaria. They are also strengthening Widden and other Danubian fortresses, and reinforcing the fleet on that river. The second army will have Tiflis as its base, on the trans-Caucasian side, and operate in Armenia, which is friendly to Russia, Trebizond and Siva, threatening Constantinople on the right. A powerful army is already concentrated at Tiflis, with no corresponding Turkish army to meet it, so that the principal fighting, if war should be declared, would be in European Turkey.—Boston Journal.

THE POSITION OF CONSTANTINOPLE.—Long before the time of Constantine the growing Roman empire required an imperial centre nearer to its geographical centre than its old capital on the Tiber; and certainly, if Constantine had fixed his new capital with the aid of modern science and art, he could not possibly have chosen a site which would prove so natural a political centre as the one he actually selected.

Compare it to-day, considered as the capital of a great empire, with Rome, or with any European capital. There is not one of them all that can sustain the comparison for a moment. Constantinople sits like a queen on the one great highway between Europe and Asia. Her site is easy of defence. She has a magnificent harbor. She is facile mistress of the sea on either side, by means of the straits of the Bosphorus and the Hellespont. What is the site of London, or Paris, or Berlin, or Vienna, or St. Petersburg in the comparison? No wonder the Czar has long looked with envious eyes toward the Golden Horn—to the capital city of the Greek church and the Greek empire. No wonder that the whole "Eastern question" has long hinged on what is to be done with Constantinople and the highway which she controls. Europe cares little about the outlying possessions of the Sultan; but it is a vital question with every chief European State who should hold the key city of all the East.

Let Russia, with her already enormous possessions in both Europe and Asia, hold Constantinople as her southern capital, and she will not be long in showing Europe who is mistress of the whole Eastern continent. While the Ottoman Empire was still at the height of her power, while the glory of her arms made all southern Europe tremble, this fear and dread was because she held her seat at Constantinople, and thus sat mistress of the "two seas and the two sands."

But later, when the ancient prowess of the Moslems gave place to supineness—when the Turk, who was a strong man in his ancient home, became effeminate in these sunnier climes, the fear grew to be, not lest the Turk should encroach upon Europe; the dread was not because he holds his seat in Europe; but there is a disquiet and anxiety lest he be unable to hold the position he has conquered, lest he become a prey to the teeth of the huge Russian bear. And this is no idle fear, for given any strong and intelligent European government seated here, and—she rules the world.—Galaxy.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The most awfully thrilling news of the week has been the destruction of between three and four hundred human lives by the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre.

The political squabble over the Presidential election continues in full blast, and is certainly developing great political corruption and fierce antagonism, which threatens a bloody revolution; but we are anticipating a quiet termination—ED.

Notices.

VERMONTERS, READ.—More labor is demanded in the mission fields in this State than we have funds to pay the expenses of. There are back pledges unpaid, some of which have been standing some time. These should be paid, as they are much needed. Send on at once, and save us the expense of visiting you personally to collect these pledges. There are flattering fields opening for building up churches, and we hope the brethren of this State will not let the work drag heavily for want of funds. Let the laity sacrifice with the preachers and the work will prosper. Send to me at Morrisville, Vt., or to J. T. Edson, East Roxbury, Vt.

A. A. HOYT, 1st Elder.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—If the Lord will, a Protracted Meeting will be held in the meeting-house at Upper Bartlett, N. H., Wednesday evening, Dec. 13th, and over Sunday, Dec. 17th. Bro. J. B. Deering will be with us to assist in proclaiming the Word. A cordial invitation is extended to all the waiting ones in this locality.

E. S. MOULTON, Committee.

NOTICE.—An adjourned session of the Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec will convene at Magog, P. Q., Thursday, at 10½ A. M., Jan. 4th, 1877, for the transaction of the following business: 1. To adopt an amended form of its Constitution, as voted at the last session, and published in the Crisis of Oct. 14th, 1876. 2. To elect a full board of officers. 3. To take a deed of the Lake View camp-ground, as already arranged. 4. To appoint a Campmeeting Committee. 5. To elect a delegate, or delegates, for the next August Convention of the A. C. Association, to be held in Chelsea, Mass. 6. Miscellaneous business. We hope for a full attendance of all interested, all members of the Conference especially; and all others who can unite upon the basis proposed.

Dear brethren, united we stand, divided we fall. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer. Northern Vermont and New Hampshire can unite with us if they think best.

C. P. DOW.
E. C. ORCUTT.

NOTICE.—To those who have written to me, and others, I would say, that I have arranged with the Scitico Church to be absent on the 10th, 24th and 31st of Dec. Will willingly tarry longer than the Sabbath if the interest and duty demands further effort. My address is Box 43, Scitico, Ct.

H. C. SMITH, Pastor A. C. Church, Scitico, Ct.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference at East Washburn, Me., commencing Friday, Dec. 29th, and continuing over the Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all, both ministers and people, to come and labor for the upbuilding of the church of Christ and the salvation of sinners.

E. I. CROUSE, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held in Richmond (Reed meeting-house) evening, Dec. 28th. The preaching brethren belonging to Conference are especially requested to attend. Let all come filled with the Spirit, and labor for salvation. Will Brn. Baker and Hall come?

H. D. REED.

NOTICE.—There will be a meeting at Dorchester, N. H., the Lord will, commencing Dec. 14th, six o'clock P. M., to continue over Sunday, the 17th. Brn. George E. Brown, George M. Little, and others, are expected to be with us to preach the Word.

J. B. S. PILLSBURY, for the church.

Dedication.

The A. C. Church just completed at Sparta, Morrow Co., Ohio, will be dedicated to the worship of God on Sunday, Dec. 31st, at 10.30 A. M. Bro. Grant will be present with the great Map of History, and continue meetings as the Lord may direct. Bro. Burr and others are also expected to be present and assist in the services. Let there be a general rally to this meeting. The church extend a hearty invitation to all to come.

In behalf of the church, E. M'CULLOCH, Pastor.

P. S. Those coming from the North will take the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. to Fredericktown, arriving at midday. Be sure and write to John Blinn, Sparta, Morrow Co., Ohio, at least five days previous, what time to meet them, and how many are coming. Those coming over the Cleveland and Columbus R. R. will be met at Cardington by writing to Bro. Blinn as above.

E. M.

DISTRICT MEETING.—The Farnham District Meeting will be held at the Stone school-house, near Bro. Eri Jewell's, East Farnham, to commence (D. V.) Friday evening, Dec. 22d, at seven o'clock, and continue its sessions over Christmas day, Dec. 25th. A good attendance is earnestly desired. Let all come who can and join to worship God and speak of his kingdom, now so near. All our ministers who can are expected to attend. See that the churches in the District are well represented.

C. P. DOW.
L. MARSH.
E. G. CHADSEY.

NOTICE.—The first Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church, known as the Lawrence and Leavenworth Conference, will convene with the church at Reno, Leavenworth Co., Kansas, Friday evening, Jan 19th, 1877, to hold over Lord's day. All are invited to attend.

A. C. SILER, Sec.

NOTICE.—There will be a Protracted Meeting of the A. C. Church, held with the Salt Creek Church, at the Little school-house in Republic Co., Kansas, commencing Dec. 28th, and holding over two Sundays. The North Western Quarterly Conference of Kansas will meet some time during the meeting at the call of the President. Eld. J. C. Smith, the State Evangelist, is expected to be present. Everybody is cordially invited to attend, and all ministering brethren are requested to be present to help preach the Word.

THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Sec. of the N. W. Quar. Conf. of Kansas.

NOTICE.—At the last annual meeting of the Vermont Conference, a resolution was passed to encourage the churches to take up collections once in four weeks to aid the State Missionary work. Let this work be attended to.

H. B. QUIMBY, Recorder.

NOTICE.—I would say to those churches who have requested me to preach for them, that I am now at liberty to do so, as the Lord may open the way. Address me at 61 Bellevue Avenue, Providence, R. I.

A. W. SIBLEY.

"TRUTH AND ERROR CONTRASTED."

Being a Review of a Series of Sermons delivered by Eld. R. Newton, D. D., near Stevenson, Ala., against the views of the people known as Advent Christians.

BY ELDER J. A. CARGILE.

We have just published a neat edition of the above in pamphlet form, adding to the Review "Man in Death," by Edmund Law, D. D., late Lord Bishop of Carlisle, Eng., a very valuable work written one hundred years ago.

Also Extracts from fifty eminent writers, ancient and modern, who teach that immortality is a gift through Christ. This is a grand work to circulate everywhere.

For sale by J. A. Cargile, Stevenson, Ala., or I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me. Price 10 cents postpaid. Sold also at the World's Crisis Office.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and endurance. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per one hundred, or 15 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are anxious, perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of the nations. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 80 cts. per dozen, by mail.

Address I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

☞For sale as above at the Crisis Office.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

This is a large, illustrated, monthly paper, devoted to a critical exposition of Bible Truth and an earnest advocacy of Bible Salvation. It is the aim of the publishers and editors to make it liberal in spirit, vigorous in tone, sound in theology, free from hobbies, and radical in maintaining a positive and saving religion. The Banner is now edited by A. A. Phelps, Wm. Sheldon, and D. T. Taylor. Terms: One Dollar a year, strictly in advance. Subscriptions may begin with any month. Liberal terms to agents. Sample copy free. Address Bible Banner, Vineland, N. J.

Appointments.

☞ APPOINTMENTS MUST BE RECEIVED AS EARLY AS TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following RESOLUTION was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"RESOLVED, That no appointments be published in the CRISIS henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given."

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"RESOLVED, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

An answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a book of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It is having a wide circulation. We have just received a quantity of the pamphlet edition, and can now fill orders at the following prices: Pamphlet, 25 cts. per copy; $2.25 per dozen by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Bound in cloth, 30 cts. per copy by mail; $3.00 per dozen by express.

IF I SHOULD DIE TO-NIGHT.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face,
Before they laid it in its resting-place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress—
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night!

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind with loving thought
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought,
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said;
Errands on which the willing feet had sped—
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words would all be put aside,
And so I should be loved and mourned to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once more to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully.
The eyes that chill me with averted glance,
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old, familiar way.
For who would war with dumb, unconscious clay?
So I might rest, forgiven of all to-night.

Oh, friends, I pray to-night,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow;
The way is lonely; let me feel them now.
Think gently of me; I am travel-worn;
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive! oh, hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.

Littell's Living Age.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

WM. KELLAWAY.

ROMISH CANT.

In the Universe of Nov. 4th,—a Roman Catholic newspaper—is an article on Guido Fawkes, the plotter against the King and Parliament of England, of whom we gave a brief notice in our last week's letter. Concerning this would-be murderer and his diabolical scheme, it says:—

"There was a plot 1605 to blow up King James and his Scottish favorites. A few desperate men who were Catholics entered upon this wicked scheme, were detected, and cruelly executed. They attempted it at their own individual risk—they failed, and suffered the penalty.

The faith which they professed, had they practised its teaching, would have taught them (as it has always taught the world from the day of Pentecost) that vengeance belongs to God, and that they should have left their cause to him—that they should have appealed to Heaven against the infamous barbarities of Elizabeth and James. They were neither wise enough nor good enough to do this, and perished on the scaffold for their contempt of the dictates of their own religion."

How very fine to talk of what the faith of the so-called Church would have taught poor Guido if he had followed its teachings! One would think that the Romish system was the most harmless thing imaginable! That it was a very dove, and most gentle! Inoffensive as a lamb, and extremely forbearing! That it would have made a saint of Guido if he had but attended to its teachings! That, catching its spirit, he would have been filled with all the graces of the Spirit! Of course, Rome could never hurt anybody. It could not harbor hatred, meditate revenge, or be guilty of cruelty. The rack, the faggot, the fire, thumb-screws, machines to unheart, bedsteads to stifle, the dripping torture, and multitudes of diabolical inventions, it never employed them, it never even thought to use them; certainly not. "Vengeance belongs to God," and Rome, having no clawing talons, and no venomous sting, has always left it to God to repay all transgressions; who can doubt it? Of course Rome had nothing to do with Smithfield, and the men who died there rather than worship a wafer as God. Rome never heard of the Inquisition, so awful that the bare mention of it stops the blood for a second in its onward circulation. Cant! Dissimulation! Hypocrisy! Anybody who knows history is not to be blinded after this fashion. Useless is it for the most immoral and unconscionable system the world has ever seen to appear so virtuous and avengeless. Blood and bones, fire and sword, Smithfield, St. Bartholomew's day, the Spanish Inquisition, all, reveal the spirit of Rome. Let us beware of Romish duplicity. She does not mean her fair-speaking. It is not the truth of her heart. And luckless the day for any country in which she gets even temporal ascendancy.

THE TRUTH GAINS.

The truth gains! Ever mighty in itself, mighty for its reasonableness, mighty for its convincing power, and when Bible truth mighty for its divinity—it continually makes for itself course to men's heads and hearts. The Bible doctrine of immortality has lately won to its belief and confession two more noble ministers of the Word. Messrs. Samuel Martin, of London, and Cyrus E. Brooks, of Cheltenham—both of them "reverends," and probably justly respected—have avowed themselves satisfied with the revelation of immortality as made by Christ, and dissatisfied with heathen conjectures about the soul's sempiternity. We do not know if they hold with this the congruous truth of the saints' inheritance of the earth as the Scriptures teach, so cannot give information on this point. But even one step in the right direction is cheering.

THE DEATH OF CARDINAL ANTONELLI.

No doubt, you will have learned, long before this reaches you, of the death of Cardinal Antonelli, the Pope's right hand man. Cardinal Antonelli was an accomplished statesman and a subtle trickster. The Papacy owed more to him than to any other man. But for him, Pius IX would be lower than he is now; and God and men know that he has sunken deeply. But what we were specially struck with in reading of Cardinal Antonelli's death was, that he has left a vast fortune. The idea that Romanists have of their priesthood is that of poverty. They will describe them as clad in a seedy coat, and having musty bread for their fare. They speak of their giving the bulk of their income to the widow and orphan. In the event of their having a trifle left, on the occasion of their death, we hear of the residue as willed to some institution of the Church for religious purposes. We happen to be rather sceptical of all these reports. And by what comes out even in Roman Catholic prints, we find our doubts fully justified. For Cardinal Antonelli has died leaving a fortune of thirty million francs! Very poor, was he not? Of Jesus, it was written, "He had not where to lay his head!" The man who called himself His disciple was clearly "above his (so-called) Lord." But the poverty of the Papal retinue is one of those delusions that should be exposed. We write against these things, because we abominate all shams. The truths that we have the blessedness to believe in common with our brethren has done one good thing for us at any rate—it has set us on our watch against deceptions of all kind.

SPIRITUALISTS IN TROUBLE.

Spiritualism is encountering rough weather in England. I have observed four or five different cases in the daily papers where parties practising Spiritualism have been subpœned by summons of the legal courts to appear and answer to the charge of having "unlawfully used divers subtle crafts, means, and devices, to deceive and impose" on their respective prosecutors. They are brought up under the "Vagrant Act" of George II, cap. 83, sec. 4. In one case, that of Dr. Slade, the Court has found the prisoner "guilty," and the offender is sentenced to an imprisonment of three months! His counsel, however, has given notice of appeal to a higher tribunal. It looks as if the Government were about to deal with this development as a broad cheat. Certainly, there is a lot of deception practised by the mediums of this "new religion," if the whole thing is not produced by some inexplicable occult power attaching to the human body. I have heard it intimated that it is the doings of Messrs Devil and Company, that when the devil is not present by his angels, he is supplemented by the cunning of the mediums. But of that, and of Spiritualism in its entirety, some have more certainty than myself. Speaking of trickery and diablerie, there is a letter in the Rock (Church of England newspaper) that is very striking. Its statements are vouched for as facts by the party who sent it for publication; some "friends of his own family" being his authority. It runs thus:—

"As we had all heard marvellous stories of the wonderful feats performed by the Indian medicine-men or jugglers, we followed our guide to the medicine-lodge, where we found six men dressed in bear-skins, and seated in the circle in the middle of the apartment. The spectators were standing around, and so arranged as to give each individual a view of the performers. They civilly made way for our party, and placed us so near the circle, that we had ample opportunity of detecting the imposture, if any imposition should be practised. After sitting for some time in a kind of mournful silence, one of the jugglers desired a youth who was near him to bring him some stiff clay from a certain place which he named on the river bank. The young man soon returned with the clay, and each of these human bears immediately commenced moulding a number of little images exactly resembling buffaloes, men and horses, bows, arrows, etc.

When they had completed nine of each variety, the miniature buffaloes were all placed together in a line, and the little clay hunters mounted on their horses, and holding their bows and arrows in their hands, were stationed about three feet from them in a parallel line. I must confess that at this part of the ceremony I felt much inclined to be merry, especially when I observed what appeared to me the ludicrous solemnity with which it was performed. But my ridicule was changed into astonishment and even into awe by what speedily followed.

When the buffaloes and horsemen were properly arranged, one of the jugglers thus addressed the little clay men, or hunters: 'My children, I know you are hungry; it has been a long time since you have been out hunting. Exert yourself to-day. Try and kill as many as you can. Here are white people present, who will laugh at you, if you don't kill. Go! don't you see that the buffaloes have already got the scent of you, and have started.' Conceive, if possible, our amazement, when the speaker's last words escaped his lips, at seeing the little images start off at full speed, followed by the Liliputian horsemen, who with bows of clay ond arrows of straw, actually pierced the side of the flying buffaloes, at the distance of three feet. Several of the little animals soon fell, apparently dead, but two of them ran round the circumference of the circles, a distance of fifteen or twenty feet, and before they finally fell, one had three and the other five arrows transfixed in his side.

When the buffaloes were all dead, the man who first addressed the hunters spoke to them again, and ordered them to ride into the fire—a small one having previously been kindled in the centre of the apartment; and on receiving this cruel order, the gallant horsemen, without exhibiting the least symptoms of fear or reluctance, rode forward at a brisk trot until they had reached the fire. The horses here stopped and drew back, when the Indians cried in an angry tone, 'Why don't you ride in?' The riders now commenced beating their horses with their bows, and soon succeeded in urging them into the flames, where horses and riders both tumbled down, and for a time lay baking on the coals. The medicine men gathered up the dead buffaloes, and laid them also on the fire, and when all were dried, they were taken out and pounded into dust. After a long speech from one of the party, of which our interpreter could make nothing, the dust was carried to the top of the lodge and scattered to the winds. I paid the strictest attention during the ceremony, in order to discover the mode by which this extraordinary deception was practised; but it was of no avail."

As I have written a long paper in addition to the foregoing, I will conclude my letter for this week.

THY WILL BE DONE.

L. B. WEAVER.

How often, while passing over the rough sea of time, do we meet with trials and temptations so severe that we almost feel that all things are against us; then, after a moment's pause, we can say, "Thy will be done;" for whatever we meet here we know must be for our good. Though cast down we are not forsaken. We can say, "Thy will be done;" for though it may be trying and grievous, yet it is all for our good.

We know he does nothing but what is for our good, and we can say, "Thy will be done." And O! how sweet to know we are safe, resting in his arms. No matter what the discipline may be, we know that God our Father is all love. He will never suffer us to endure more than what is for our good; and if the billows rise, and the storms beat against our frail bark, we can rise above it all.

It seems so sweet to think that he takes so much notice of a poor frail creature. We can gladly and willingly say, "Thy will be done," for it seems so sweet, so blessed, to feel his strong arms around us holding us so tightly by the hand, lest our grasp grow light and we lose our hold. For we know that only in thee, our dear Savior, do we trust, or hope for life here, and all we need. And so, whatever comes, though lonely I go down the valley, I can see my dear Savior's smile, and hear his sweet, gentle whispers of love, saying, I am with thee. I will bear thee in my arms of love. Amid all the roar of the waves, I answer, "Thy wil be done." I am thine to do, to bear, or suffer. All is thine.

THOUGHTS BY NIGHT AND DAY.

C. COLEGROVE.

Shall I write for the Crisis on this dark, pouring, November Sunday night? Is not righteous writing as timely as righteous preaching? True, close at hand, is a wife, feeble and failing, but yet, tended night and day by faithful daughters. A week ago, I could not content or compose myself to any work with ink and pen, but now a greater calmness may make an hour's continuous thinking possible.

The Great Pyramid's Grand Gallery years, the six critical and ominous years of the impending south wall, are well begun indeed. At what hour Jesus, thief-like, shall call his prepared and watching to the heaven of his presence, is a question, which, if we cannot accurately solve, we can at least prayerfully meditate. I know it has been often alleged that the "perplexity of nations" was a thing to be readily recognized, but I think it has hitherto been held in reserve. Now, there is something more like an approximation to the fulfilments.

This is the more evident in the present indecision and suspense relative to the choice of President in these United States. It is probable that many thousands of intelligent and able men are moved with a kind of foreboding of evil yet to be developed out of the present extraordinary and unlooked-for dilemma. Many good people are determined to be hopeful, and declare that hope and faith for our country's stability are sacredly obligatory. On the contrary, we look for change, agitation, upheaval, and perhaps, grave disaster.

We have seen the petty parades and great demonstrations of the late political campaign. A great childish pole-raising mania has prevailed, and with flags, and drums, and horns, the workers have assembled like bees, as if full of most patriotic and important business. When Paul was a boy, he acted like one, but when he became a man, he put away his boyishness. And so in my humble way I testified, protesting against the waste of time and money in such liliputian enterprises. I said, openly, "God's plan is a kingdom, and Christ shall be king of all the earth.

When election day arrived, and the night was drawing on, a friend came to escort me to the polls. "No," said I, "I prefer not to vote. I respect you and would be glad to oblige you, but I am conscientious in refusing. I may possibly be mistaken, but I expect trouble out of this election. And so I kept, as I meant to do, my hand out of this political pool.

Some will say, I know that good men should help make good government, and they cling to it and insist on it; and I have no dispute with them, but I prefer, in the earnest expectation of a kingdom from above, to wait for that; and signify my preference for it and let the politicians wage their wars.

Some will have it that it is a very sublime thing for eight millions of people to vote, and choose their rulers. But are not their rulers fallible men, often corrupt, and not God-fearing? The Scripture says, "our citizenship [politeia] is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior."

And now see how all this great campaign buzz, and ambition, and labor, have culminated. The Lord knew how it would be, and he will rebuke the nations that put their trust in men and measures to right things, and leave out of calculation the literal kingdom of Jesus, altogether.

The political and religious newspapers may be hopeful as much as they please; we shall see if they are not perplexed, and if the faces of American statesmen do not gather paleness before next inauguration day. If we do not predict, we can watch. What can those religious papers expect, which have had their day of multifarious talk, and never said one word to notify or admonish their readers of a quickly coming Jesus? They have glorified their denomination, and said, "Come, let us build houses of worship abundantly and beautifully;" and let us see if they do not rush irresistibly into a crisis which will astonish them a little, when they were looking for halcyon days.

And then, to think this kind of dead lock should come in our very centennial year! That the suspense and wonder should commence just as the grand and mighty pageant at Philadelphia was about to dissolve! What a commentary on our national majesty and glory, that our great national autumnal election should prove a puzzle and a mystery, and that the nation in its great act of franchise has embarassed and entangled itself! The statesmen have said that the treasures of power belong to the people themselves, and apparently what a muss of it they have made! They have forgotten what a good man said, "God hath spoken once, twice have I heard it, power belongeth to God." We have glorified education and popular intelligence. We have said the voice of the people was the voice of God. Yet, see what unwashed and unlearned masses are packed in some of our cities, controlling elections and finances, and menacing with communistic or revolutionary riot the peace of the whole country, should occasion arise.

I spoke of the Centennial. I said, Lord, if it is thy will I will visit this great modern wonder, but if not, I will not. And as the months rolled by, God did not seem to open my road and I remained at home. Whether richer or poorer by the means, I know not.

But listen to the tumult over the water! We think we know, without a doubt or mistake, that the beginning of days such as the world has never seen, is ready at hand. And right along with all this we see no less a man than a tabernacle pastor and preacher in the great metropolis, welcoming and sanctioning an English poet with his poem on the immortality of the soul, and at the end of the reading, publicly thanking God for "this voice from his throne." That a voice from God's throne? That a voice from his throne which says man is immortal and never can die? Let us see what this Brooklyn preacher says in another place on this same subject. "Did you think," says he, "that your soul was short-lived, and that, panting, it would soon lie down for destruction? Or had you no idea what your soul was worth? Did you ever put your fore-finger on its eternal pulses? Have you never felt the quiver of its peerless wing? Have you not known that after leaving the body, the first step of your soul reaches to the stars, and the next step to the farthest outpost of God's universe, and that it will not die until the day when the everlasting Jehovah expires?" Such language we should consider not only strong but extravagant, and not only extravagant, but we fear, very far indeed from the truth. And what is sometimes termed strong, is very weak indeed, especially if it is not true. But I suppose I can soon find in a sermon of this same preacher, the very same teaching at much greater length. Perhaps, at another time, I will give it.

I have at hand an interesting letter from an English writer on prophecy, E. H. Tuckett, of Exeter, Devon, who says, "I am quite prepared to receive startling news, and do verily believe that the advent of our Lord may be any day, to take away his waiting saints, prior to the development of the last troubles upon the earth; and they are rapidly developing now. I am expecting the manifestation of the great monarch who is to do according to his will, and upon whom, together with his adherents, the vials of Divine wrath are to be poured out, though even before that, the Lord Jesus may call his church to himself. The state of Europe at the present moment is very critical, and I fully expect to see Russia, Germany and Italy pitted against the rest of the powers in spring, if not before. I think this coming struggle will greatly alter the maps of Europe and of Asia; that it will end in the manifestation of Daniel's "wilful king," and I think that we who are waiting for our Lord will not have to wait much longer.

Though this Brother's expression of belief should not be in all respects in accordance with opinions entertained by some, or even many of your readers, yet, they might be glad to know how future developments are regarded abroad. At all events, there is every reason to expect events of tremendous magnitude before the end of 1877. Time is on the wing. With what resistless rapidity we are borne along!

Sardinia, N. Y., Nov. 20th, 1876.

CAN IT BE TRUE?

I. C. WELLCOME.

Yes, it is really so. But they who think it and say it have too little knowledge of gospel work and too little interest in real, vital, christian principle, to be listened to in their covetous talk.

What is it? This is it. There are those who attend meetings with the Advent believers, and some who claim to be christians, and Adventists, who complain that some of the ministers speculate in books, bring books with them to sell when they come to preach, and make money on them. I scarcely dare to write this for the public eye, for so few real men and women can comprehend the idea that any person worthy of respect, especially any one called a christian, could be so low in the scale of reason, interest, or manhood, as to find fault with Christ's ministers for bringing books to the people, which are filled with "the gospel of the grace and kingdom of God," or saints' inheritance, expositions of prophecy, or signs of the times. That those who disbelieve and oppose these truths should accuse ministers, who receive two or three dollars a week for preaching, on which to support a family, of speculating in books, is not strange,—though the themselves help support ministers who receive twenty or thirty dollars a week;—for the books teach what they do not wish to have taught.

But for those who believe what the books teach, to fear their minister will make five cents, a shilling, or a quarter of a dollar occasionally, on a book which they themselves would be glad to read if they could borrow it or have it given them, is too bad a principle to be indulged in by christians.

Brethren, you should encourage your ministers to circulate good books as much as possible. They often do very much good, sometimes more than the sermons we preach. I have had much experience in circulating books and tracts, and, though I know but little of the fruits, yet I do know of many sinners brought to Christ, Universalists converted, and christians led out into clear light of truth, advanced in the knowledge of God, and established in the blessed hope of Christ's soon coming, by the books and tracts circulated.

Speculate on books! O shame! Hide your head and blush, Envy! Ah! think of the meanness of a thought that an Advent minister is speculating who is obliged to earn the most of his support by manual labor, travel and preach three or four times as much as "salaried" ministers, and buy and carry a bag load of gospel books and tracts, and act the peddler; sell one occasionally for cash, trust one and lose some, give away enough to take two or three times the profits of all the books he sells. Brethren, do "not be weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not." There are crosses, trials, toils, reproaches and tribulations, but eternal life and glory in the end.

REPORT OF EAST MAINE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of the East Maine Missionary Association, held at East Palermo, was a season of interest and profit to the people. The effort was blessed of God in the reclaiming of some who had for many years been in a backslidden state, and others are inquiring the way to Christ and eternal life. Regular meetings were established, and the Lord is at work among the people.

Preachers present: H. S. Mitchell, G. W. Weeks, S. K. Partridge, J. R. Hall, and J. Carr.

A few brethren and sisters in the place rejoice and take courage to press on and do what they can for the salvation of the perishing while time continues.

G. W. WEEKS, Secretary.

OPPOSITION TO TRUTH.—No person, whether inspired or uninspired, has been raised up, in any age of the world, to contend for truth and righteousness, who has not been opposed by pretended friends, as well as open enemies. Moses had for his opponents Korah, Dathan, Abiram and his two nephews, the sons of Aaron, all of whom pretended to be the friends of God, and the true followers of his law. But were they so? David had his friend Ahithophel—Jesus his friend Judas—Paul his friends Alexander, Hymeneus, and Philetus, once disciples of Jesus, but afterwards mighty opponents of the Word of God. One of them, at least, greatly withstood the Apostle's testimony. Let not the true hearted disciple of Christ, even in this age, expect to find it otherwise. Blessed are ye when men shall speak all manner of evil against you falsely, for my name's sake; rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven.—Ex.

SOME HINTS FOR THE SLEEPY.

C. P. DOW.

"What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not."—JONAH 1: 6.

Once, during a protracted meeting where those pricked in their heart were saying in right good earnest, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" and a messenger of the Coming One was faithfully and feelingly proclaiming earth's fiery baptism and man's last judgment near; in the desk was sitting a visiting clergyman, with his head thrown back, and mouth open wide, snoring loudly, literally fast asleep,—asleep in every sense we may suppose. This sight, I, with many others saw; it was a sad and disgusting spectacle indeed. A watchman asleep, and his charge in the greatest peril! But this was a rare case, not often repeated. Yet, not so much worse than what is too frequently seen in most congregations; sundry persons locked in sleep, or in easy positions, inviting slumber.

A brother once said in my hearing of another brother who generally walked four miles each Sabbath to attend meeting, and usually slept the most of the time while there: "Bro. W. takes great pains to walk four miles to get a nap each Sabbath. I should much rather go to bed at home and sleep the day away and save the travel." One of the old Divines said, "He that sleeps in the place of worship is no better for the time, than a corpse, at whose funeral the minister is preaching." Another D. D. has said that sleepers in religious assemblies are public nuisances, and ought to be driven out from the place they so much disgrace. A hard saying indeed, which none but those asleep would seem willing to bear.

Among expedients used by ingenious preachers to waken the drowsy, are the following: Bishop Aylmer, seeing his congregation pretty generally asleep, took his Hebrew Bible from his pocket, and read a chapter, which roused attention, when the old minister very properly rebuked them for sleeping when they might have understood him, and being all attention when they knew not a word he said.

It is related of the witty Dr. South, that, preaching before King Charles, he saw him fast asleep. He stopped short, and in a loud and altered tone of voice, three times called out, "Lord Lauderdale!" when his lordship stood up and looked at the preacher, who addressed him with great composure, "My Lord, I am sorry to interrupt your repose, but I must beg of you not to snore so loud, lest you should wake the king."

Finally, by way of quaint illustration of this subject, take the instance of an old minister in Kentucky—not Peter Cartwright, though it might seem like him—who purchased a ten whistle, and when his hearers went to sleep, as usual, he sent forth from his whistle a very shrill sound. All were at once awake in time to hear him say in cutting language, "You are a set of smart specimens of humanity. When I preach the gospel you go to sleep; when I play the fool you are awake." The above may suffice.

Let those interested accept a gentle, well intended hint, and keep awake. Well may it be inquired—"What meanest thou, O sleeper? If we sleep when we ought to be awake, it has a meaning. In the case of a few it may only mean bodily infirmity, or poor ventilation, but in the case of many, a want of interest—shall I say faith? in the gospel message. Let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober.

WAITING FOR LIGHT.

R. F. EMERSON.

I am waiting for light. For many years I have unfortunately been addicted to the loathsome practice of smoking and chewing tobacco. A few years since I was converted—joined the church—and am now professedly a "new creature" in Christ Yet still I keep puffing, puffing, chewing, hawking, and spitting the filthy, sickening slime everywhere. I know the Word of God exhorts us to "put off the old man man with all his deeds, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts," and to "put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." And if it is wrong to further indulge my lustful appetite, I think I am willing to abandon the detestable vice, as soon as I see the light.

My brethren and sisters are tried with me because I smell so strongly of its stench; they say I am entirely saturated with it; that my clothes and breath emit such an offensive odor that they can hardly sit near me in meeting; and if obliged to call at my house on an errand they can smell the nauseating fumes of tobacco from garret to cellar. This is all true, and I know we are exhorted in the Bible to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God;" and as soon as I can see sufficient light, I mean to stop the degrading, unchristian habit.

I believe in holiness, "without which no man shall see the Lord." Yet when I go to speak of it in meeting, there comes over me such an oppressive consciousness that I myself am unclean, because I am deliberately defiling my body by this revolting, filthy practice, that I am powerfully tempted sometimes to quit it altogether, and be a free man in Christ, or give up forever trying to be a christian. Of course I know that it is our reasonable service to "present our bodies a living sacrifice to God," that he might make them "temples of the Holy Ghost," an "habitation of God through the Spirit;" and as soon as anyone can show me that the carnal, soul-polluting practice, that destroys my peace and spirituality, and renders me unfit for decent society, is wrong, then I will give it up.

"Oh, wretched man that I am! When I would do good, evil is present with me." I would like to help the cause of God. I can see so many urgent needs just now that call for immediate financial assistance. I would like to contribute something to the tract and mission fund, something to spread the gospel. I would like to take a good religious paper or two for my family to read, and have a little something left to give our poor preacher, who is struggling along with but little help or encouragement, spiritually or financially. But it costs so much for pipes and tobacco, that unfortunately I am unable to do the good with the Lord's money that I otherwise would. Of course I understand that our money belongs to the Lord as much as our time, talents, voice and influence; and if it is wrong to use God's money to feed this abominable lust of the flesh, and let his suffering cause lie unhelped and neglected, then I will forever renounce the dirty habit,—save the money I would expend for pipes and tobacco, and put it into the treasury of the Lord, for his service. Only I demand the necessary evidence to show that it would be right to do so. I must have the light.

Can anyone give me more light upon the moral nature of this heathenish, God-dishonoring, soul-enslaving, unjustifiable indulgence of one of the lowest, beastliest lusts of human carnality to be found in the whole vocabulary of moral and physical nastiness? I am waiting for the light.

Rochester, N. H.

[We think that those walking in such darkness as represented in this article are illy prepared to lead others in the way of life, and should earnestly seek the heavenly unction before attempting to lead the flock of Christ to the mount of holiness for translation.—ED.]

THE COMING LORD.

SILAS B. MABEY.

It is near at hand, even at the doors. The Monarch of world-wide renown is soon to come. The King of kings will soon take his throne as rightful heir, and hold the sway over all the earth, renewed in splendor and in beauty arrayed.

The once smitten and crucified Savior, who carried our sins to Calvary's rugged mount, will come; and all foes will be subdued before him, and he will reign on his eternal throne. But who can contemplate the thought or realize the change? It is too grand for mortal eyes, too great for mortal hearts to endure. None but immortal beings can endure the gaze of the all-seeing eye of Him who never slumbers. The marvellous change is soon to take place. The closing of time, the folding of the world as a vesture, is at hand. May every heart prepare him room.

"SINGING WITH THE SPIRIT."

We are favored with all kinds of singing; quartette, solo, congregational; singing good, bad, and indifferent. But there is another kind of singing which the Scriptures call singing with the spirit and with the understanding also. And this kind we are afraid, is rather a stranger in our churches.

It involves two things: paying enough attention to what we sing to take in its meaning; and further, feeling what we express. We sing:

"Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do.

And does one out of a thousand realize in the least the meaning of what he is singing? Does he understand that the words mean that he puts his life, his acts, his property, his houses and lands, his time, his abilities, all at the disposal of God, renouncing henceforth all of these, holding them solely as a steward for God, and using them for his service? Does he understand this? And does he mean it?

"Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me."

In singing this, do we understand its meaning, and do we from the heart mean it? Do we really so eagerly desire to be nearer to God that a cross will be welcome so as it makes us nearer to him? After the hymn has been sung, there comes to the singer a failure, a fire, a fall in stocks, the sickness of a child, his own sickness, or some greater sorrow than any of these. This is the cross by which God would raise the believer so that he may be nearer to him. And now perchance he realizes that he did not know, and still less did he feel and mean, what he was singing.

"Deny thyself and take the cross,
Is the Redeemer's great command.

How often we hear somebody singing these tremendous words, some one who lives all his life (or her life) in luxury, who has never known an act of genuine christian self-denial!

The late Dr. Bailey, of Indiana, once said to us, "before I was converted, I often used to close my lips and keep silent when they were singing some hymns, as for example—

"I'm not ashamed to own my Lord."

I could not sing it I knew that I was ashamed to own him.

We were once present when, after the singing of the hymn.

"I love to tell the story,"

a brother rose and said, "Do we love to tell the story? How often do we tell it? How many times have you told it this week, how many times have I told it? It is well to put these questions to ourselves. It is well to sing good words. But it is also well to fill them up with meaning, with spirit, with heart. It is not well to have the words be a comely form, within which the shriveled soul gives forth a ghastly rattling.—National Baptist.

AN EXPLANATORY STATEMENT.

Editors of the Pioneer Press:—

About two years ago Rev. D. R. and Mrs. Mansfield became members of the First Methodist Church of this city. Previous to this, Rev. D. Cobb and myself called at their house and were shown their credentials, given by the Advent Christian Conference of Michigan. On these credentials they were received into our church. At the St. Paul District Conference, at Hastings, Aug. 24th and 25th, the following resolutions were passed:

First—That our brother, D. R. Mansfield, is hereby authorized to exercise his gifts among us as a local preacher.

Second—That we do hereby endorse the Christian character of our sister, M. S. Mansfield, and recommend her as a laborer with us, and as worthy the confidence and sympathy of our church.

At the District Conference held at St. Paul Aug. 22d and 23d, 1876, the following was adopted:

"Rev. D. R. Mansfield having passed a very good and satisfactory examination in doctrine and discipline, it is recommended that this district conference recognize his credentials of ordination, and that we recommend him as a suitable person to be received into the Minnesota annual Conference."

Before this matter was presented to the conference Bro. M. had a conversation with Bishop Bowman, showing him at the same time his ordination papers. He found no fault with them. Accordingly they were presented to the conference. After a sharp discussion, in which the kindest feelings for Bro. and Sr. Mansfield were expressed, the credentials were rejected on the ground that the Advent Christian church was not evangelical, a number of the ministers, however, voting in the negative. There being no way for Bro. Mansfield to become a member of our Annual Conference, but by discarding his former ordination vows and submitting to the re-imposition of others; this he said he could not do, feeling that they were as sacred as any, and sufficient. That the Conference should ask him to do this, was asking too much. Though a charge was offered him by different presiding elders, he feels that under the circumstances he can work no longer as a Methodist. This conclusion is greatly regretted by very many. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have the confidence of the ministers and laity of the M. E. Church in Minnesota as far as they are known.

I AM ON THE ROCK.—One day a female friend called on the Rev. William Evans, a pious minister in England, and asked him how he felt. "I am weakness itself," he replied, "but I am on the Rock. I do not experience those transports which some have expressed in the view of death, but my dependence is on the mercy of God in Christ. Here my religion began, and here it must end."

HOME AND HEALTH.

AMONG THE PEOPLE.

When we were down in the State of Delaware a few weeks ago, our kind-hearted landlady was very asprehensive that we would starve on account of our abstinence from animal food. As day after day passed, however, without any serious evidences of immediate danger of such an accident, her fears gradually lessened, though she could not understand how we could endure hard work on such trifles as graham bread, oatmeal gruel, and fruits. One morning the good lady called upon us for a prescription for "biliousness," from which she was suffering, being subject to similar "attacks" at frequent intervals. We of course suggested a reform in diet as being the proper means by which to remove the cause of the difficulty, recommending a dietary somewhat similar to our own, whereupon a little dialogue arose.

"Is it really true, doctor, that pork, butter, pepper, spice, preserves, and such like, will make one bilious?"

"Certainly; and the principal reason why people are more bilious in the spring than at other times, is because they eat more of those harmful articles in the winter than at other seasons."

"But how do they make one bilious?"

"By overworking the liver. It is the business of that organ to remove from the blood certain poisonous products called biliary elements. Fats, alkalies, and most of the articles used as condiments, are also removed from the circulation, chiefly by the same organ. Now, if you give the liver too much work to do; if you require it to spend nearly its whole strength in getting out of the body injurious substances that you have put into it, such as grease, soda, saleratus, pepper, salt, etc., then it will be unable to keep the blood free from impurities. The poisonous biliary elements will accumulate in the system, and the patient becomes 'bilious.'"

"Well, doctor, very likely that is all true; but don't you ever get 'bilious?'"

"No, indeed! One has no right to be 'bilious' when he understands the cause of that condition. We would as soon think of being a thief as of being 'bilious.'"

"But don't you ever get up in the morning with a bad taste in your mouth and your stomach out of order, and no appetite for breakfast?"

"Oh no; we always have a keen relish for our simple fare. One hardly knows what a good appetite is until he becomes a hygienist."

"Well, I couldn't eat a bit of breakfast, and have a terrible headache and a dreadful taste in my mouth. I guess I'll have to try your way. I wish you would tell me where you get your oatmeal."

"With pleasure. It is the best brand made, and is manufactured by Mr. F. Shumacher, of Akron, Ohio."

Before we left, our host and hostess had both made quite a little progress in improving their dietary.

While looking over some ancient medical works in a book-store in Philadelphia, last summer, we were led by the proprietor into a conversation about medical matters. The gentleman was a very intelligent and well-informed man, and was evidently in the habit of thinking for himself, and trusting very little to authority unless well supported by logic. He stated that he had for some years been suffering from a nervous disease which seemed to affect principally the spinal cord. As the disease progressed, he observed a growing weakness of the lower limbs, and had become very apprehensive of complete paralysis. He had applied to numerous physicians, and had taken all sorts of drugs, but with the uniform result of no improvement. A few weeks previously he was under the care of one of the most eminent physicians in the city, taking phosphorus and other drugs supposed to be especially beneficial to the nerves. In spite of the most assiduous care, he was rapidly growing worse. Becoming skeptical concerning the propriety of such treatment, he discontinued it, throwing away his medicine and dismissing his physician. His symptoms began to improve at once. From a condition of almost entire helplessness, he had improved so much as to be able to attend to his business, and was then contemplating a visit to a neighboring health institution. With a few words of commendation of his plans, we left him, after making a few purchases.

Intelligent people everywhere are getting their eyes open to the real nature of disease and proper methods of treatment. Skepticism concerning the efficacy of drugs is spreading widely. Let the light shine. People only need to investigate to be convinced.

THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

IMPORTUNITY.

"Men ought always to pray, and not to faint."—LUKE 18: 1.

Pray on, thou weeping, wrestling saint,
Thy God, though silent, hears;
He registers each sad complaint,
He bottles all thy tears.

Though instant answer be not given,
Thy cry he doth not spurn;
Each prayer sent weeping up to heaven,
With laughter shall return.

Who gave his Son shall give thee all
Thy utmost need can want;
Oh, wert thou half as prompt to call
As he is prompt to grant!

Then be not like the faithless king,
Who smote but thrice, and stayed;
Smite on, until thy smiting bring
The answer which it prayed.

Trust to thine Advocate on high,
Whose pleadings never fail;
His word, which backs the feeblest cry,
Shall make that cry prevail.

ROME.

BY REV. E. HOARE.

It is impossible to imagine anything more delightful than the prospect of the promised return of our most blessed Savior. How do the father and the mother feel when they welcome their long-absent son from India? How will many an English wife feel when she welcomes her husband from the Arctic expedition? And how must the church of God feel when, after her long night of toil and difficulty, she stands face to face before Him whom her soul loveth, and enters into the full enjoyment of the promise, "So shall we ever be with the Lord"? There will be no tears then, for there will be no sorrow; no death then, for there will be no more curse; no sin then, for we shall see him as he is, and shall be like him. Then will be the time of resurrection, when all the first-born of God shall awake to a life without decay and without corruption; and then the time of re-union, when the whole company of God's elect shall stand together before the Lord, never again to shed a tear over each other's grave; and then will be the time when those who have loved and longed after him, as they have journeyed on alone in their pilgrimage, will find themselves on the right hand of his throne, and hear his delightful words, "Come, ye blessed children of my Father: inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world!"

No wonder then that the people of God are waiting with anxious hearts for the advent; and no wonder that many are ready to say, "Lord, how long?" and to ask, What hope is there of his quick return? Have we, or have we not, any reason to look out for it soon? To this inquiry I would endeavor to draw your attention this morning; and in doing so, I do not intend to examine into what are usually called "the signs of the times," but to study the great prophetic sketch of the world's history as given to us by the prophet Daniel. This may be termed the back-bone of prophecy, and almost all the great prophecies of Holy Scripture fit into it at some point or other; so that, if we wish to understand them, we must begin by studying it. I fear I may not interest those who aim simply to have their hearts warmed by the ministry. But they must remember that the real study of God's Word requires work, and that work, though it lays the best possible foundation for feeling, does not at the time excite it. To-day, then, we are to work, and I hope the Lord may so bless his Word, that through work we may be led to feel.

Our business, then, is to endeavor to discover whether the great prophetic sketch of history, given through the prophet Daniel, encourages the blessed hope that the coming of the Lord may be near. Daniel gives a prophecy of the history of political power from his own day till the time when "the Ancient of Days shall sit," and describes a succession of events which must take place in the interval. It is clear that our business is to ascertain how many of these events have taken place, or, in other words, how far we have advanced in the series.

In the study of our subject we have the advantage of looking at two sides of the picture, for it has pleased God to give us the same series as seen in two different aspects. In the second and seventh chapters you will find predictions of the same events under different figures. In the second chapter the prophecy is given as a vision to a proud, idolatrous monarch. So the different kingdoms about to arise appear to him as the several parts of a mighty image, with himself as the head of gold. It was given in just such a shape as should coincide with his idolatry and his pride. Whereas, in the seventh chapter, the vision is given to one of God's people, and he sees in all this glory nothing better than a series of wild beasts coming up one after another to devour. How different is the estimate of the world from that of God! The world regards Babylon as the head of gold, the summit of glory and greatness, while God looks on it as a savage beast, to be dreaded by his saints! The same difference of character may be observed in the visions of the coming of the Lord. To the great king it appeared as a triumphant kingdom, to the captive prophet as a manifestation of the Son of man. The one saw a kingdom, the other a person; the one, the overthrow of power, the other, the advent of the Lord of Glory.

But now let us look at the series. In both prophecies there is a description of four kingdoms which should in succession be supreme in political power, and which should fill up the interval between Daniel and the advent.

1. There is the head of gold in Nebuchadnezzar's image, the same as the lion in the vision of Daniel. The most precious of metals corresponding to the king of beasts.

2. There is next the breast and arms of silver, corresponding to the bear of Daniel.

3. After that the belly and thighs of brass, representing the same nation as the leopard of the prophet.

4. And following them is the last kingdom of the four, represented to Nebuchadnezzar as the "legs of iron, and the feet, part of iron and part of clay," and to Daniel as a beast, "dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly."

It is interesting to observe how the same iron character is attributed to this last power in both visions. In the one we read of it, chap. 2: 40, "The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all things, shall it break in pieces and bruise." And in the other, chap. 7: 7, it is said to be "strong exceedingly, and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it."

Such is the series of kingdoms that were to hold the chief political power of the world, and fill up the whole interval between the date of the prophecy and the advent of the Lord. Now the remarkable, and, I believe I may say, the indisputable fact, is that, according to the prophecy, all these four kingdoms have arisen. They have followed each other exactly as it was predicted. Babylon was the head of gold, or the lion. The Medes and Persians were the breast of silver, or the bear. Greece, always called "the brazen armed," in classic poetry, was the belly and the thighs of brass, or the leopard. And then the mighty power of Rome, far exceeding all the others in its terrible strength, with the legs of iron in the royal image, and the teeth of iron in the prophetic beast. Thus far there is an agreement almost unanimous among the students of prophetic Scripture; and the conclusion certainly is, that we have already been a long time under the last of the four successive empires of the world. So far then as those four empires are concerned, we are encouraged to entertain the strong hope that, as we have reached the last kingdom in the succession, we may begin hopefully to look out for the end. We have passed the last station on the line, so now we may begin to prepare for home.

But again. There is one remarkable difference between the fourth kingdom and the other three, viz., this, that its history is divided into two periods, during the first of which it appears as an undivided power, and during the second split up into ten. In chap. 2: 41, it says, "the kingdom shall be divided." In this divided period it is represented by the ten toes on the image and the ten horns on the beast. The ten toes are described as kings, or kingdoms, in chap. 2: 44; and so are the ten horns in chap. 7: 24, where it is said, "the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." So then the prophecy teaches us that when Rome had overpowered Greece, it would go on for a time as one mighty undivided empire, but that after a time it would break up into a cluster of kingdoms, and that this cluster would retain amongst them the supremacy of the world. It does not describe any fresh shift of political supremacy to any new kingdom that should arise, or the loss or decay of that supremacy. But it teaches that there would be a division in the kingdom, that the parts should fall asunder, and that, while the iron of the fourth kingdom would remain amongst them, there should be so much clay mixed up with it, that it should never again be united under a single head.

Now this is exactly what has happened. In the days of the Cæsars united Rome was supreme in the pomp of the iron empire. Its body was Europe, and its head was the emperor. It was one as much as Babylon had been one under Nebuchadnezzar. But look at it now. There is all the old power; for Europe and its races practically govern the world. It has not lost its iron. But there is no one kingdom that embodies all. The power is vested in a cluster of independent nations. Many attempts have been made to combine them: some by conquest, as in the case of Napoleon; some by negotiation, as in the case of the Spanish marriages. But all in vain, for the toes are irrecoverably divided, and whatever is done, though as an aggregate they retain their power, as individual nations they are always distinct. I have no time to enter into detail, but I regard this division as a most remarkable fulfilment of the prophetic word. More than five hundred years before the coming of the Lord there was a captive in Babylon, and God so directed that man's mind, as through him to communicate to the world even then the present position of modern Europe. With such a fact before us who can doubt the inspiration of the prophet, or the statement of St. Peter, that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost"?

But, without stopping to consider the wonders of the prophecy, let us learn the lesson which it teaches us with reference to the nearness of the advent. We have already found that we have long since reached the fourth kingdom of the series; and now we are led a step further; and find that we have long since reached the second period of that kingdom. It is exceedingly difficult with accuracy to assign a date, for the transition was gradual; but we shall be sufficiently near if we say that it practically took place between twelve and fourteen hundred years ago. And when we reflect on such a promise as that in Daniel 2: 44, in which God assures us of a kingdom that shall be set up in the days of these kings, and never be destroyed: when we consider that those kings have already been reigning through that lengthened period, it is surely time that we begin to look out for that which is to come; for the happy and blessed day when we shall welcome the kingdom which shall never be moved, and when Christ himself shall reign in glory.

But this is not all, for, although we shall learn no more from the vision of the king, we may gather much more from that of the prophet, for in it we find a most important additional prophecy. I can perfectly understand why it was given by the prophet, and not by the king, for I believe it to refer to the religious history of Europe, and the king of course had no concern with that. He did not care for religion, or for the saints of God. I allude to the prophecy of the little horn rising in the midst of the other ten. I have no time to discuss arguments, and can merely state conclusions. All, therefore, that I can do now is to express my own convictions on two points:

1. That the little horn diverse from all the rest is the Papal power.

2. That the time, times, and dividing of a time, which is to be the limit of its power, stands in prophetic figure for 1260 years.

If this be correct it gives some idea as to the duration of the second division of the last kingdom, for it shows that it must last at least 1260 years. Still more, as the Papacy is to be destroyed at the approach of the Ancient of Days, if we could only ascertain the date of its commencement we might calculate the date of the advent. But here is the difficulty, for who can say when a horn begins to grow? and who can determine the date of the first swelling of Papal pride? It is impossible to make any such calculation, and I believe it would be wrong to attempt it. But we may still be led by the great outline to hope for the approach of that most blessed day. The horn has been growing a long time, and it is impossible to read European history without believing that the 1260 years cannot be very far from its close. Everything therefore looks like an approaching end. We have long since reached the fourth kingdom; long since reached its second, or divided period; and, though we cannot say when it took place, we have long since seen the commencement of the 1260 years of the little horn. Surely then it is high time that we be looking out for the coming of the Lord, high time that we be watching with our loins girt and our lamps burning, and we ourselves as those that wait for their Lord.

With these facts before us, I may fairly ask any thinking person, whether there is not good ground for the hope that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh? You observe I have not dwelt on minute and isolated points. I have taken the great outline of the world's history, and compared it with the great outline of the Word of prophecy. I see that the two exactly correspond. I thank God from the bottom of my heart for the evidence given of the inspiration of Scripture, for no such prophecy could have had its origin with man; and, while I thank God for such a confirmation of the faith, I cannot resist the conclusion that we have nearly reached the end of the series, that we are living in the last part of the last period of the last kingdom, and that the next great event of this prophecy is nothing else than the sitting of the Ancient of Days, the glorious kingdom of the Son of Man.

But do we all desire it? Are we all looking out with loving and longing hearts for the appearance of our beloved Redeemer? I fear that many would be very far from glad if they thought it would come to-morrow. Their own consciences tell them they are not ready, and in such a case how can they desire it? You might say to them, as in the words of the prophet, "To what end is the day of the Lord to you? the day of the Lord is darkness and not light." I believe it to be impossible for any man really to desire the coming of Christ as his king until in his own soul he is personally acquainted with him as his sin-offering or atonement. Thus I believe that you will find very few really desire the advent who have not practically and experimentally drunk in the great doctrine of justification by faith. If you are reconciled through the precious blood of Christ; if you are justified in the righteousness of Christ; if you are preserved and sanctified by the loving spirit of Christ, then of course you will be ready to say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus; come quickly." But if you are still living for the world, content with the world's gifts and the world's enjoyments; or even if you are still toiling and struggling on to reach him you know not how, and know not whether you may trust him to place you on the right hand of the throne or not, how is it possible that you should be happy in waiting for him? Never rest, therefore, till you stand accepted in him; till you have good reason to believe that you are safe, and not safe only, but beloved. Then you may wait for him, then you may welcome him, then he cannot come too soon to please you; and if his sign is seen even to-night you will be able to say, "This is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—"Rome, Turkey and Jerusalem," London, England.

EXPOSITION OF THE NINTH OF DANIEL.

A. ALLING.

For a number of years I have been quite in the dark in relation to the beginning and ending of the weeks mentioned in this chapter. From the events named in verses 24–27, it has appeared to me that the seventy weeks, and the one week, must have terminated in some way with the events connected with the destruction of Jerusalem; but how they could be thus extended has been a mystery until within a few days past, when, through the blessing of the Lord, some light has dawned upon the subject, which looks so much like the truth that I venture to place it before the brethren for their prayerful consideration.

Our past errors should not deter us from further examination of this, or any other Bible subject; but should teach us modesty, and not to assume positive conclusions from inferential testimony. Here lies the real objection to the discussion of the periods.

I will begin by quoting from Ezra 6: 14, 15—"And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered, through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo; and they builded and finished it according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus and Darius and Artaxerxes KING [singular] of Persia." And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of Darius the king."

The following facts are here taught, which should be kept in mind:

1. That the decrees of these three kings are a unit of the Persian kingdom in the fulfillment of the one decree of the God of Israel.

2. That these kings are each called by their respective names.

3. In those decrees, and in the work here named, all is confined to "the house," without any reference to the wall and the streets of the city.

Now, as there is but one decree on record from the God of Israel in relation to the building either of the house or the city by the Persian kingdom, are we not justified in including in that decree the two decrees of Artaxerxes, of the seventh and of the twentieth years of his reign, as parts thereof? I think we are.

Further, I believe in our application of the seventy weeks, the sixty-nine, the sixty-two, and the one week, we should observe the division there made, and apply them according to the facts narrated in the prophecies of Daniel and Jeremiah, and in their fulfillment recorded in Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah.

We will now refer to Daniel 9: 25, 26—"Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks. The street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times; and after threescore and two weeks the Messiah shall be cut off, but not for himself" Mark this expression; the cutting off is after sixty-two weeks, and not sixty-two and a half weeks as is often claimed.

Now, if we date this decree at the close of the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity, in the first year of Cyrus, and end them at the birth of Christ, we have literal events that tally with the prophecy at both ends of it. The sixty-two weeks evidently ended at the crucifixion, and consequently must have commenced at a later date; probably with the fulfillment of the events recorded in the book of Nehemiah, under the decree of Artaxerxes, in the twentieth year of his reign. This is clear, provided we are willing to abandon our stereotyped theory of a common beginning of all these weeks, and ending them in the events of the seven years in which Christ was crucified. To understand the beginning of the seventy weeks of verse 24, it is needful to look into the prophecy recorded in the tenth, eleventh and twelfth chapters of Daniel, which were subsequent to the explanation in the ninth chapter, but are in harmony therewith. The tenth chapter reads—"In the third year of Cyrus king of Persia, a thing was revealed unto Daniel, whose name was called Belteshazzar, and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long; and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." Verses 20, 21—"Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? And now I will return to fight with the prince of Persia; and when I am gone forth, lo! the prince of Grecia shall come. But I will show thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth, and there is none that holdeth with me in these things, but Michael your prince." Dan. 11: 2—"And now I will show thee the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all; and by his strength, through his riches, he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia."

With this fourth king ends the vision in relation to the Persian kingdom. That this king was the renowned Xerxes, is too evident to admit of a doubt. The three preceding ones are the ones named in Ezra 6: 14, as above.

Please observe these facts:

1. This vision was in the third year of Cyrus, while chapter nine was in the first year of Darius, some six years previous.

2. The time appointed was long.

3. The thing was true.

4. He had an understanding of the vision.

5. It was "that which is noted in the scripture of truth."

Now, as this vision covers the whole of the Persian kingdom, as also the Grecian and Roman to their end, of course the time appointed for that end can be none other than the 2300 days of chap. 8: 14; but the time of their beginning is made dependent upon the seventy weeks of chap. 9: 24, which beginning was yet future when this last vision was given.

Now, as the Persian kingdom attained its zenith under Xerxes, as is clearly taught in the above quotation, and as is confirmed by history, and that with his Grecian defeat commenced Persia's decadence, is it unreasonable to assume that with his death this reckoning is to begin? I think not. By thus doing the seventy weeks can be extended to the events connected with the destruction of the city and the sanctuary by the Roman prince, without a violation of Bible statements or historic facts. Dan. 8: 27 reads—"And he [the Roman prince] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate" (margin, "desolator").

This covenant, I understand, is the one repeated by Moses in Deuteronomy, where God declared if they disobeyed he would bring upon them "a fierce nation," who should besiege and destroy their city, and in the straitness of the siege they should eat their own offspring; all of which was fulfilled by this Roman prince. "Their sacrifice and oblation" was made to cease in about the middle of that week, by the Romans cutting off all their supplies of cattle, etc., used for those purposes. That Jerusalem is yet desolate, "and that which is determined" has not yet been poured upon the desolator of that city (which is now the Turkish power), is evident to all; hence, the assumption of those who claim that the 2300 days have ended already, is proven incorrect.

The pending events connected with the Eastern question indicate most clearly that God's declared judgments "upon that desolator" are now at hand.

I am aware that it is claimed by many of the learned that Ahasuerus, of the book of Esther, is identically the same as Artaxerxes Longimanus, and that the seventy weeks began with the issuing of the decree by Ahasuerus for the slaughter of the Jews throughout his empire in the twelfth year of his reign. This application I have long doubted, for these reasons: it is inconsistent to believe that, after the issuing of the decree by Artaxerxes, in his seventh year, to Ezra, in favor of Jerusalem, that he should in his twelfth year listen to the instigations of Haman, and issue a decree for the destruction of the Jews throughout his kingdom. Again, Artaxerxes is said to have reigned forty-one years; whereas the account given in the book of Esther makes Ahasuerus' reign to be only about fourteen years.

Now, suppose we follow other learned authors (see American Encyclopedia), and substitute Xerxes as the true Ahasuerus, will we not obtain a harmony that cannot be otherwise attained? This to my mind clears up a dark point, and I hope it will be duly considered by all lovers of truth.

I am aware that this application does not accord with Bishop Usher's chronology, but as long as it harmonizes with God's revealed arrangement of times and events, I think it not expedient to reject it because of this discrepancy.

With my present light and knowledge of the ambiguity and uncertainty of Persian history, I do not believe it to be among the things possible to harmonize Persian chronology with the prophecies under consideration; and hence, after many years of fruitless effort, I am compelled to drop the human and cleave only to the divine, which alone will stand the test both here and hereafter.

With this view, the shorter periods of chapter twelve—the last part of this vision, can be harmonized; and I see not why all may not accord with the original writing of the vision, which has appeared to tarry so long. With my present light I cannot extend the termination beyond the present time; and the events connected with the Eastern question, as also in our own land, justify us in looking for the long-promised redemption to be now impending. Let all be watchful and in constant readiness, and all will be well.

THOUGH DEAD, HE "YET SPEAKETH."—How many ever think of leaving a voice behind them as Abel did? Every person has about him an atmosphere of influence either for good or evil. No one is of so little importance but that he may do some good. There is no neutral ground. "He that gathers not with me scatters abroad," says the great Teacher. We need to attend to all the little things of manner and life. There are certain amenities and little nameless graces that give much of sweetness and light to life, and are of such force that the great can no more afford to ignore them than those in the humble walks of life. Every disciple should let his light shine.—Apostolic Times.

THE HIGHWAY FOR THE REMNANT OF GOD'S PEOPLE.

B. KNEPPER.

Two questions claim our attention. First, What is meant by "the remnant of God's people"? Secondly, Where is the highway upon which they shall go?

We will take up the second question first, and consider "the highway" spoken of more particularly. We find different points to notice if we begin at the commencement of this chapter. Verses 1–3 refer to Christ in his mediatorial state. Then in verses 4–5, he is set forth "a judge and rewarder" of all—the righteous, and the wicked. After judgment is alluded to, a state of the world is described which cannot take place before the curse is removed from the earth, and the works of the devil are destroyed. Verses 6–9. Then, by noticing every feature in verses 10–16, we find distinct marks of the earth's restored state through Christ the second Adam. This is the time concerning which Peter said that "the heavens received Christ until the time of the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy since the world began." Happy time, when a sinless state is restored.

In trying to get the right meaning of the "highway" mentioned in the words before us we have only one reliable guide, and that is, if we can find some other passages in the Bible by which the one before us is more clearly explained. Then, in chapter 35: 8–10 we read of a highway for the redeemed of the Lord to walk there, in a state where sorrow and sighing shall be no more. Then, by reference to Rev. 21: 1–5, we cannot mistake seeing where the highway for the remnant of God's people is to be; viz., on the new earth, when Christ's everlasting kingdom shall be set up. In reading Isa. 62: 10–12, we find first a command given—"Go through, go through the gates"; which we take to be "the gates of hades," on the ground of the Savior's own declaration that "the gates of hell [hades] shall not prevail against" his people; for it is said, "Cast up, cast up a highway"; and the reason then is given for this highway to be there by the further command—"Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Here, then, is a highway, and the people for whom it will be prepared shall be called "the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord." A glorious highway, only to be found on the new earth, for which, according to Peter's declaration, believers wait.

In the next place, we have to consider the question, What is meant by "the remnant of God's people"? A remnant is the part remaining, or that which is left; hence God's people include not the whole human family. They are a remnant left when another part of the human family have shared a different fate. For what purpose, then, is this remnant left? To be saved, saith Paul, because "the wages of sin is death," and therefore, "except the Lord had left a small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and been made like unto Gomorrah." Here is the general end to which sin leads; viz., to share the same fate as Sodom and Gomorrah.

But what did they suffer? The apostle Jude says they suffered "the vengeance of eternal fire." Jude 7. By reading only this verse, we might be led to think that the Sodomites are at present suffering, but the two previous verses give us light on that subject. The Lord delivered his people out of Egypt, and afterwards destroyed them that believed not, and, with the angels that kept not their first estate, he reserved them in everlasting chains under darkness unto the great day, as Peter adds, "to be punished."

Whatever we might be inclined to make out of the "eternal fire," which Jude says the Sodomites suffered, in a case of vengeance, it was rained from God out of heaven, as we learn from Gen. 19: 24—"And Abraham beheld the smoke of the country going up as the smoke of a furnace." By this act of God's vengeance, the inhabitants of the cities, it is said, were overthrown, or destroyed, as the Savior terms it in Luke 17: 29; and it is in this destroyed state in which Jude describes them as bound with chains in darkness, reserved for the great day of judgment. But do "the chains of darkness," mentioned by Jude and Peter, apply to the Sodomites' state of destruction by death? We will let David and Job answer the question. David says—"Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark?" Job tells of "the land of darkness and shadow of death," and "a land of darkness as darkness itself, the shadow of death, all darkness." Hence, as the Sodomites are in hell (hades), the state of the dead, "reserved for the great day of judgment," therefore, when that day shall come, hell must give up the dead that are therein (Rev. 20: 13) to be judged; and those who will "come forth to the resurrection of condemnation" will be condemned to the second death, or, to everlasting destruction, as the final result of their iniquity.

Thus we have an example of how it will be at the great day of judgment; viz., like as in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah; and to confirm this more fully the Savior compares the time of his coming with the destruction of the unbelievers at the time of the deluge, and also Sodom and the destruction of its wicked inhabitants, and then says, as it was then, when a small number was saved as a remnant, and the balance was destroyed, so shall it be in the days of his coming. Here, in both cases, we have a remnant saved, and none left. So in the end, God's people will be a remnant saved from being destroyed by the second death, because "the that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." But the balance, represented under the figure of "Babylon the Great," shall be like "a millstone cast into the sea, no more to be found at all." Hence, those who will escape the great storm of destruction, when the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, constitute "the remnant" of God's people. At the final consummation of our present world's history, God's people are represented as a remnant left out of all men who ever enjoyed a state of probation.

But then, there is another class of people of whom it is said that "there shall be no remnant left, which is to be in the year of their visitation (Jer. 11: 23), or the time of their final reward. The Savior's doctrine teaches the same fact, when he says that unto his friends he will give eternal life, with an entrance into his kingdom, as the remnant of God's people. Of his enemies there is no remnant to be left, because his doctrine declares that at the time of reckoning he will say, "These my enemies, that would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me." If we read Ps. 145: 20, we find two points clearly stated; viz., that God's people are a remnant saved out of the whole human family, and that of the wicked no remnant will be left. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy."

WAITING.

M. W. HOWARD.

"My soul, wait thou upon God."

This waiting of which David speaks is fitting for all, whether we accept it, as serving God as his true followers, or in its most restricted sense of tarrying or waiting. Many there are who fancy they are thus waiting for God's purposes and work to be accomplished in them or by them.

There may indeed be a necessity for waiting for an opportunity to do service for Christ which they would gladly perform. But let us bear in mind, that this waiting does not really begin until we are fully ready. While "busy here and there," making preparations, none are truly waiting, unless, with willing hands and cheerful heart, they are performing the little duties that lie in their pathway.

Perhaps there are but few who in one way or another are not forced to wait; and in the success of doing this, we may evince our filial trust in God as fully as when actively performing another work; for the poet has correctly said,

"They also work, who only stand and wait."

Again, there may be those who, thoroughly convinced of some positions regarding religious experience and duty, yet, find a necessity laid upon them to wait, for there are duties and obligations, domestic or social, that may not be set aside. Nevertheless, let such stand as in the "presence chamber of the Most High," waiting patiently, willing and happy to "leave God to order all their ways."

If those who are bound in the spirit by sacred bonds are indeed standing, like those who at Cana of Galilee stood by the water-pots, waiting the commands of the great Master, already giving heed to the preparatory command, "Whatsoever he saith unto thee, do it," all will be well. In God's own good time and way will he lead his consecrated ones onward step by step, if indeed the self-consecration has been entire.

It is such a consecration that God requires. Happy are they who have made it. Already they feel the fulfilment of Jesus' words, "And I will give unto them an hundred-fold." But let not such forget the warning words, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." For only in a daily, hourly, constant trust in God, is there safety; only in a full reliance, moment by moment, in the grace of Jesus, can any be able to stand in the evil hour, and time of waiting.

Then let those who look for Christ's coming so wait upon God in active, willing service, that the waiting be not irksome, but filled with joy and happiness. "For the vision is for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not live: though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Hab. 2: 3; Heb. 10: 32.

Malone, N. Y., Dec. 1876.

THE POWER OF CHRIST'S COMING.

The certainty and the nearness of the Lord's coming, and the duty of waiting for it are now, blessed be God, much more generally acknowledged and realized. I trust that the hearts of christians are becoming more and more established in this solemn reality. That is not a mere careless repetition of words when they say, We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge; and when they say in the creed, He sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. Doubt not of the fact at all. Be expecting it, and be waiting for it; earnestly desire to be ready, and prepared for it. Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief.

O, may we live more and more in the light of this coming judgment, and accustom ourselves to view everything with constant reference to it! The bringing near of the final judgment, and the realizing of the wrath then to descend on the wicked, and the promised glory then to be bestowed on the righteous, are full of weighty influence on all our duties. The solemnities and infinite magnitude of the judgment, its irreversible issue, and its eternal decision of our future state, as inhabitants of hell or heaven; and the assurance that the Judge now standeth at the door, cannot fail to quicken every one who receives God's testimony in simple faith.—E. Bickersteth, D. D.

A QUESTION.

A brother inquires in relation to our position taken in the article entitled, "The four angels and four winds." He wishes to know how we reconcile the idea that the events predicted in the first three verses of the seventh chapter of Rev. takes place before those of the four last verses of the sixth chapter. Those of the sixth evidently belong to the judgment or seventh period; and in the order of their presentation come before the angels and winds; and that order seems to be established by the expression, "And after these things," showing that the angels were seen after the cry was heard, caused by the presence and "wrath of the Lamb."

In other words, how can the first of the seventh chapter be fulfilled before the last of the sixth, when the seventh commences with the declaration—"And after these things," that is, after the things last named in the sixth chapter.?

We acknowledge there is at the first reading of these passages an apparent difficulty in the interpretation; but when we explain this by prophetic Bible parallels, it becomes very plain. The word after does not express the order in which the events seen in the vision should occur, but the order in which the prophet saw them. He did not say after these things four angels shall stand on the four corners of the earth; if he had, the prophecy would demand that the angels should do their work after the Lamb should appear; but he said, "After these things, I saw four angels;" the word after gives the order of seeing the events, and not the order of their occurrence. We have parallels to this in the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th chapters of Rev.

In the 17th chapter we get a wonderful foreshadowing of Mystery Babylon, ending with the eating of her flesh and burning her with fire, which takes place at the final judgment. See Dan. 7: 11. The 18th chapter commences the same as the 7th: "And after these things I saw another angel." The work of this angel does not follow in time the burning of the woman, for he gives God's people an exhortation to "come out of her," that they "receive not of her plagues."

The 19th chapter commences with a similar expression, but the chapter is occupied with a description of other features of the same grand terminal events of the gospel as are given in the preceding chapters, and not events future from them. This is exactly the same as the closing verses of the sixth, and the first verses of the seventh.

We find Christ giving serial prophecy by the same rule in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew. In answering his disciples' question—"What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" he gave them six distinct lines of events, commencing at different points, but each ending at his coming and the end of the world. At the end of each line he presents his coming, or events connected with it. He reaches and describes the end at the 14th, 27th, 34th, 39th and 50th verses of the 24th chapter, and at the 10th verse of the 25th chapter.

We are not to suppose that because Christ, in giving this consecutive prophecy, and reaching the end at the fourteenth verse, must, therefore, in his next utterances, predict something beyond the end. He goes back in time and starts on another line of events, and goes down to the end again; thus giving multiplied evidences of where the end may be expected.

It is just so with the prophecy under consideration. At the opening of the sixth vial the revealing angel is presented with one class of earthly events, which will transpire during the sixth period, and these are given to show where the last judgment will take place; therefore, it was natural and important, in showing the location of the judgment, to describe, not only the signs presaging it, but the event itself.

If a man was directing a stranger to a friend's house, it would be natural for him not only to describe the houses he would pass, but also the one to which he directed him. So it is in all serial prophecies. At the end of each line the judgment is invariably presented.

In this case two distinct classes of events are given as transpiring during the sixth period; and the angel did just what the Savior did—followed each one through to the judgment, which he described when he reached it. Thus we get the great day of his wrath at the termination of the physical signs. He then goes back, just as Jesus did, and follows the political line through the same sixth period, and reaches the judgment again, and describes the righteous in their robes of eternal blessedness; thus presenting the two classes at the same time with the wonderful contrast in their condition.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

From all that we can learn of the movements of the European nations, we are inclined to believe that it is still very doubtful about the final result of the present conference. From our present knowledge of the situation, we think Russia is playing the card so as to cause England and Turkey to be as quiet as possible, while she is making vast preparations for war; so that in the spring she will be ready to jump, like the leopard, upon her long-desired prey.

We were never more confident than now that the present movements in the East are prophetic, and are introductory to the last national strife; and that Russia and all the nations will have to wait for the final issue until God's appointed time shall come, and then all the world will not be able to delay it an hour. That time was wisely hidden from us, but we calmly wait its approach.

J. C.

THE OUTLOOK.—The present political outlook in this country is certainly very dark. If the Ship of State should weather this election gale, it is certain that every joint in her has been weakened, and if time continue another gale is sure to come; and should its violence increase as the present one has over those preceding it, there would be great danger of the noble ship going to pieces. It is certain, from the testimony of the Holy Book, that a fatal cup is being mingled for our beloved country, which she will be compelled to drink when God shall cause all the nations to swallow the deadly poison of his mingled cup of final judgment.

In view of this, we earnestly exhort every lover of Jesus and eternal life to keep out of these exciting political contentions, for they invariably produce a spirit of retaliation and bloodshed, which is fatal to holiness and a preparation to meet the coming Christ.

J. C.

FIRES.—One day's report of fires in the Boston Daily Journal was as follows: Little Rock, Ark., $140,000; Augusta, Me., $50,000; Blackville, S. C., $40,000; Florence, S. C., $11,000; St. Louis, Mo., $25,000; Chicago, Ill., $29,000; Waterford, Ontario, $15,000; Webster, Mass., $6,000; Greenfield, Mass., $4,000. In addition to these, ten smaller fires were reported, with one Mississippi steamer burned.

J. C.

OATH OF JESUITS.

The Order of the Jesuits was founded by Loyola, a military officer of Biscay, in France. He was a talented Spaniard, who, in 1538, assembled at Rome ten of his companions, mostly from the University of Paris. He submitted his plans to Pope Paul III., who appointed a committee to examine the merits of the institution. The committee reported unfavorably, but the Pope finally confirmed the order by a bull in 1540. The order was called the Company of Jesus. In less than one hundred and fifty years, their number increased to twenty thousand. The Jesuits are said to be "the ruling power in the Romish church in the United States." They travel in disguise, and frequently pass for noblemen, or wealthy persons, traveling for their health. The following is their oath of secresy:

"I, A. B., now in the presence of Almighty God, the Virgin Mary, Michael the Archangel, and St. John the Baptist, St. Peter and St. Paul, all the saints and the sacred host of heaven, I do declare from my heart, without any mental reservation, that his Holiness, Pope Pius IX., is Christ's Vicar General, and the true and only head of the Roman Catholic Universal church throughout the earth; and that, by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing, he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, States, commonwealths, and governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation; and that they may safely be destroyed. Therefore, to the utmost of my power, I shall and will defend this doctrine and his Holiness' rights and customs, against all usurpers or Protestant authorities whatsoever, especially against the now pretended authority and church of England. I do renounce and disown any allegiance as due any heretical king, prince, or State, named Protestants, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers. I do further declare the doctrine of the church of England, and others of the Protestants, to be damnable. I do further declare that I will help, assist, and advise, all or any of his Holiness' agents in any place wherever I shall be, in England, Scotland, and Ireland, or any other territory or kingdom I shall come to, and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise. I do further promise and declare that, notwithstanding I am dispensed with to assume any disguise to promote the interests of the Mother Church, I will keep all her secrets inviolable. So help me God. Amen."

The general of the institution is chosen for life, having absolute power. All the members are amenable to him. Quarterly reports are sent to the general at Rome, from the members who are out on missions in different parts of the world. Full and complete accounts are sent of the civil state of the respective countries in which they reside. It is said that more than ten thousand reports are annually received by the general office at Rome. One who was brought up among the Catholics, when speaking of the Jesuits, says: "In times past they have shrank from no crime which could further their endeavors."

These Jesuits are generally men of great activity and executive power. It is said "they study to perfection the art of fascination. Their pretended sancity, their winning conversation, their astounding miraculous tales, their feigned humility, and their great mesmeric power, are well calculated to lead the innocent, simple and unwary youth to take them as their spiritual guides."

As early as 1542, they established missions in India, and soon spread the doctrines of the Romish church over the continent, and the surrounding islands. For the sake of increasing their numbers as fast as possible, they made a compromise with the heathen, allowing them to continue many of their idolatrous practices, in consideration that they should publicly declare they had embraced the doctrines of the church of Rome. In the seventeenth century, the Jesuits took possession of the fair land of Paraguay, and soon became masters of the country, controlling hundreds of thousands of the natives. Every year they sent to Rome immense quantities of gold. It is said they armed the Indians, and excited them against the whites, in order to get control of the country themselves. Their aim is to bring the whole earth under the dominion of the church of Rome. Most of the inquisitors have been members of the order of Jesuits. But few are aware of the terrible influence of these men, and the work they are doing in America. Thank the Lord, the great Deliverer is coming soon. Welcome, welcome, thou King of kings and Lord of lords. COME QUICKLY.

BRIEFS.—NO. 4.

E. A. STOCKMAN.

Each dispensational truth of the Bible stands in an atmosphere of authority and power peculiarly its own, and special unction attends its faithful promulgation. The power is equal to the success of the message. Whoever accepts such truth in the love of it, and surrenders himself to its leadings, and devotes himself heartily to its defence will realize the accompanying power, the divine unction. The Holy Spirit pervades all truth, but specially in its more important and inclusive forms.

There is a large field of secondary truth which one may imperfectly apprehend and yet walk with God and be saved, if the great key truths which contain the conditions of the divine favor are cordially accepted and followed. So good men may and do differ on minor points. To insist upon absolute unity of opinion in regard to the details of truth is narrow-mindednes which savors of proscription.

The marked tendency of these times is to ignore dispensational truth and overestimate and overmagnify unimportant views, to exalt mint, anise and cummin, and neglect the weightier matters.

In the popular theology the metaphysical excludes the biblical; and among us the theoretical obscures the practical.

Great effusions of power attend special divine messages. All great doctrinal and dispensational movements of God's people have been signalized by convincing displays of divine sanction. It was so at the Pentecost, in the Reformation, and in early Methodism. But when a grand, heavenly message, committed to any person or people, is ignored or magnified, the power belonging ing to that message is lost.

It is painfully apparent that the unction which attended the Advent movement at first is largely wanting. Is there not a cause? Are we preaching with due prominence the truths which called us into being as a people? Are we pressing the main thing,—Christ at the doors and personal readiness to meet him?

The world cares nothing about our technical views. Thoughtful men attend our ministries with one anxious question in their hearts which they expect us to answer,—Is Christ coming? Is the great day of God upon us? Are we coming to the judgment? What are the evidences? How near are we to the burning day? What does the Bible teach concerning this awful subject? Are there any sure omens of the final doom at hand? There is, as there always has been, more or less, an ear to hear intelligent, earnest teaching in regard to this one theme. But now there is a newly and widely awakened desire to hear. Is our ministry meeting the exigency of the hour? Are we not expending much of our time, talent, and labors on matters of secondary importance, or no importance at all? What if one, discovering a steamer to be on fire in mid ocean, instead of shouting aloud the terrible warning, should assemble the doomed passengers on deck for a discussion of the structure and nature of the ship, whether she was built of pine or oak!

Are we not busy weighing dogmas, balancing empty theories, indulging in hair-splitting logic, reconciling the remote relations of unimportant doctrines; when the thunders of the last day are ready to break over our heads, and the fires of a dissolving world are kindling under our feet?

The one need of this hour, emphasized as never before, is the Old Message, Behold he cometh! go ye out to meet him! This stirs the people when all else fails. Power attends this while theorizing is as empty as air. God honors this divinely given message with the Spirit's presence and unction, but leaves technical dogma to utter barrenness.

A peculiar glory heralded and crowned the first advent; a peculiar inspiration and unction attend the faithful proclamation of the second coming.

This is a truth that admits of no substitute, it contains a blessedness exclusively its own. Nothing else will feed the flock of God, now, like this. This alone strikes, with any force, the minds of perplexed and anxious men as a probable solution of the wonders of these times.

This truth never loses its freshness to real believers. The last startling cry, in the final hour of earth's probation, Behold he cometh," will be as welcome to ready, waiting saints as were its first accents forty years ago from lips now hushed in death, and infinitely more so.

O! for one more grand rally around the old message, the great, chief truth;—Christ at the doors, the resurrection and the kingdom already upon the threshold.

How emphatic the necessity! How abundant the evidence! How solemn the responsibility!

THINKING SUBSTANCE.

D. T. TAYLOR.

Matter is substantial; mind is spiritual. Matter and mind, the material and spiritual, constitute all man knows about. The universe is made up of these. Although conscious of both, we know but little of matter, and still less of mind. We also divide matter into ponderous and spirit, into living and dead. The first we can weigh and measure, but spirit substance is hard to grasp and define.

Matter in animal organisms is constituted of living tissue. Mind is woven therewith, but dissection fails to find it after death. Living brain tissue seems to be the origin of mind. We are unconscious of any other origin. God so wills it. The life force still lies behind the mind: it is the spirit without which man is dead.

What is life, is still an unsolved problem. We know life is, but know not its essence. We can only say it is the invisible cause directing the forces that produce activity in physical organisms, or living tissue. Conjoined, the two constitute "living soul." Mind without substance is an abstraction, a metaphysical, inconceivable idea. Mind wedded to flesh and blood seems to be king, but we know it is both master and slave. It is man in his integrity who owns the mind, the soul, the spirit. These last never say, My man, but the man says, My mind, my soul, my spirit. Ownership of all is in the man, therefore these parts are not the man, for what a man has cannot be himself, though it may be a part of him. The man, the living soul in toto, is the superior of all. Man is God formed, but dust made.

Kindred to mind in nature is air, attraction, and electricity. But these are not intellectual forces: mind is. These are not conscious: mind is conscious. Is thought immaterial? Who knows? Has God said living brain tissue, conjoined with his own inbreathing (Gen. 2: 7, and Job 33: 4) cannot think? If so, where is it recorded?

Do you know, reader, that the notion of the immateriality of the soul never was advanced in christian discussion until the days of Hobbes—1679, Toland—1722, and Mettrie—1751? Substance attracts; can it think? Beasts are flesh and blood, living tissue: don't they think? Now, as we don't know that immaterial substance can think (if there be such substance), and cannot assert the impossibility of the endowment of substance with the mysterious power of thought, as well as the no less mysterious power of attraction, unless God has specially revealed the truth of the matter, how are we going to decide this question?

For the present I will content myself with a quotation from "Essays on the Human Understanding" by the very celebrated John Locke, who writes: "We have the ideas of matter and thinking, but possibly shall never be able to know whether any mere material being thinks or not; . . . it being in respect of our notions, not much more remote from our comprehension to conceive that God can, if he pleases, superadd to matter a faculty of thinking, than that he should superadd to it another substance with a faculty of thinking; since we know not wherein thinking consists, nor to what sort of substance the Almighty has been pleased to give that power. . . . For I see no contradiction in it, that the first eternal thinking Being should, if he pleased, give to certain systems of created senseless matter, put together as he thinks fit, some degrees of sense, perception and thought." This "first of philosophers" often speaks of "thinking substance." And he was an "immaterialist" too! More still, John Locke was a christian!

REMOVAL.—Bro. F. A. Baker, of Maine, has removed to Minneapolis, Minn., to take the pastoral charge of the Advent Church in that city. He believes God sent him to that place. May the Lord fill him with the Holy Spirit and abundantly bless his labors.

THE WAR CRISIS.

Russia is arming; in two or three months she will be ready to take the field. If Turkey finds herself alone in the presence of this aggression, what will she do? It is a general opinion in Europe, and particularly in Russia, that it is only a matter of simple military parade, and that Russia will occupy Bulgaria as easily as she would Odessa. This error is not shared in Turkey. On the contrary, Turkey is resolute to defend herself to the last, convinced that she could resist with success, if she were in a condition to reply with her own armaments to the armaments of Russia.

It is believed in Turkey that the Russian attack will be made, not only via Roumania and Servia, but by Asia. This prospect does not appear to terrify Turkey. If confronted by Russia only, and under normal condition, her Asiatic frontier seems sufficiently protected, and she thinks Widin, Silistria, and other fortified points will enable her to resist in Europe. She can put in motion 1,000 battalions, by summoning the reserves not yet called in. Most of her fortresses are admirably equipped, Kars alone having 350 guns of modern and effective make, and she possesses twenty-four large and small armor-clad ships, whose construction, generally English, leaves nothing to be desired. Her troops, like her ships, need indeed to be better commanded; but it cannot be doubted that, in case of a war with Russia, the Turks, as fortunate as the Servians, would be led by efficient officers.

What Turkey really lacks is money. By what prodigy she has been able hitherto to meet the terrible expenses of war nobody can say. At present Turkey has been able to face ordinary exigencies and the overwhelming demands of the struggle; but the moment has come—and this is Russia's greatest chance—when the last million, even in paper money, will have been swallowed up. Turkey requires to call out and equip her Reserves, and take measures in view of war, and to do this promptly; but she cannot do so without money. What the Russians knew much better than anybody else is that he Exchequer is now exhausted, and that if it is not replenished, her defence will be ridiculous, if not impossible.—London Times.

THE position of the missionaries in Turkey is evidently critical, as they are watched with extreme jealousy. If they were suspected of sympathizing in the least with Russian demands, their lives would be in great peril, and in many cases assassination would be sure to follow. Their policy is to stand entirely neutral, but the fact that they are christians, though in no way identified with the Greek church, in which Russia takes so deep an interest, exposes them to the blind rage of the Mohammedans. We should not be surprised at shocking news from some of the mission stations remote from Constantinople.—Baptist Union.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of Two THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

THE "CRISIS," AND ITS VALUE.

HIRAM MUNGER.

What should we do without it? When these strange prophetic events are so fast rolling on, Advent people need just such a paper, especially such as live out in the country. It keeps us posted on what is being now fulfilled.

Bro. Wyman, who is acting as an agent to collect of delinquent subscribers, says there are three classes of delinquents:—the first class are really poor and honest; the second class are those who are able, but heedless; the third class are not disposed to pay for it. They take it, and read it, but make various excuses;—some did not send for it; others don't want it if they have got to pay for it; others will pay from twenty-five to fifty per cent of their bill, and refuse to pay the remainder. Sending over eight hundred free papers to preachers and worthy poor, you will all see what a load the Office is carrying.

Further, he says some claim they are too poor to pay for the paper, while every appearance indicates the contrary. Some are so poor they hardly have the comforts of life, yet value the Crisis so highly that they pay every dollar they have, with tears in their eyes, saying they cannot do without it in these times, and will pay the rest when they can. Now the Crisis is valued by such; but is not by those who refuse to pay. The free subscribers ought to pay twenty-five cents a year for the postage. Think of this, you that have it free, for there are over eight hundred of you, and this amounts to a large sum a year. These facts are not known to many. I felt it duty to make them known unsolicited.

WHAT IS RIGHT?

I. C. WELLCOME.

"Yea, and why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?"

It seems duty for some to say to the household of faith things which many think but dare not say; things which need to be said to many who do not think of them. Should christians rob God? A strange question, truly. Yet the Lord once asked through his prophet Malachi this question, and answered it also. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes [tenths] and offerings. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

This was said to ancient Israel. They were guilty, and for their sin in this thing the Lord allowed their enemies to break in upon them and devour their substance. The same guilt has also attached to the christian church, or to portions of it. But this was not the condition of those called out some thirty years ago to proclaim the immediate advent of Christ, and to wait for his coming. All they were and all they possessed was consecrated to Christ and his work. Ministers and exhorters were kept constantly at the work, and they traveled extensively, going everywhere and proclaiming the message. Meetings were numerous; books, tracts and papers were circulated by thousands. Why? Because all had a mind to work. Money was poured into the Lord's treasury in abundance; there were means to carry on the work, and the servants of the church did not need to stop preaching to earn bread and clothing for their families. Those who had money in banks drew it out; those who owned bank stock or other stock sold it; those who had surplus lands or goods sold and invested largely in the work of publishing the gospel of the kingdom of God. It was marvelous to their opposers and to worldlings to see the amount of work done, and the blessings of God which followed, in the conversion of souls, the reclaiming of wanderers, and the quickening of multitudes of members in the churches.

We shall readily admit that there was some overdoing, some misdirected zeal, some waste of money and labor. But it was done unto, or for the Lord. He did not curse them, as he did the robbers in Israel. He blest, and great and grand results have followed until now. Is there not too little of that sacrificing spirit among this same class of people, and those since united with us, at the present time? Are not many now robbing God? So it appears. While it is true that Christ is about to come to give eternal life and glory to his church, and the evidences of it are beyond dispute, many, who are claiming to see and believe it, do not so firmly believe as to modify and correct their anxiety to add to their perishable wealth, or to gratify their tastes for worldly pleasures. While some devote their all to the service of Christ, and give more than a "tenth" to aid the preaching of the Word, yet others earn money to invest in banks, railroad or government stocks, to buy surplus lands or goods, to enlarge or beautify their houses, to obtain more fashionable furniture, clothing, or other equipage, to visit watering places and other desirable places for intellectual or physical entertainment, by which their means are so exhausted that but very little is left for gospel work.

Is this robbing God? Missions are meagrely sustained; the tract cause dwindles to a shadow; deeds of charity are quite too rare and too insignificant, excepting where it is to be trumpeted abroad. The little companies of disciples all over the continent are doing with less preaching, and do not half support the ministers when they preach to them. Many of them have little or no preaching, and if they have a minister once a month, or once in six months, they do not have the means to give him sufficient to support his family one week, at the rate they themselves live. Many are too poor to take the paper they love dearly; too poor to buy and scatter tracts among their ignorant (?) neighbors; too poor to give anything to sustain a missionary effort either among themselves or elsewhere.

What is the cause of all this? Oh, "these are hard times." Yes, robbing God has always brought with it "hard times," and hard hearts also. The Lord withholds his blessing from those who rob him, and their time is wasted because they do not find employment, or their substance is wasted when they do find employment. So that the saying is true, "Millions for Mars, and mites for Jesus."

That the times are hard is true; and that the extravagant living and gigantic speculations and gambling schemes of the nation and the masses are the chief causes, and served to bring on the present depression in business, and stagnation and scarcity of money, is true. And this causes all to feel more or less the curse it brings. But should christians follow the examples of the nation and of the opulent? If the times are hard, money scarce, and labor low, and retrenchments needed, and prudence required, should it cause christians to do less for Christ, hold less meetings, have less faithful preaching, pay less for preaching? Should they consent to have live, faithful, working ministers preach for one-third or one-half what it actually costs to support their own families? Should they not retrench in their superfluities, adornings, self-gratifications, and worldly investments?

Some do this, and thus always have something with which to carry forward the work of Christ. Such are blest with "the Spirit," and are wells of "living water." Remember, "ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

Correspondence.

From Bro. Jas. Morrison.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—Beyond the possibility of doubt, we must now stand in very close proximity with earth's closing scenes. The great day of God, with its awful, sublime and eternal realities, steadily draweth nigh. It is grand to live and see these last tremendous days. We are in perilous times, and but few see their danger. They are hasting on to the judgment, like the unthinking horse to battle, careless of consequences.

Man has long been warned to flee from the wrath to come, to "fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." Those who have been interested in the great event of the coming of the Lord, and have watched the signs of the times for the last thirty or forty years, may now rejoice in the bright evidence of the immediate consummation of their blessed hope. Never were the evidences so clear, the prospect so bright and glorious, as now. Mighty changes, stirring events, glorious to the church, but awful to the world, are in the immediate future. Very soon we shall witness the crowning consummation.

New Glasgow, P. Q., Nov., 1876.

From Bro. M. Batchelor.

Bro. Couch:—I am not so as to preach yet; so I thought I would write a few words for the Crisis, giving my testimony for Christ and his Word. I feel confident that we did right thirty-five years ago in saying, "The hour of his judgment has come," in the quickly between the sixth and seventh trumpets. And, though we have suffered disappointments, and the world has laughed, I believe God approves of our course in still sounding the alarm, Behold he cometh, yea, is even at the door.

In my sickness I blessed God that I had, by his grace, held fast my integrity amidst all the discouragements, and that neither frowns nor favors had driven me from following my firm conviction in reference to what was truth. I feel that the last items of prophecy are fast filling up, and I shall be somewhat disappointed if we pass another passover before the Lord comes.

The nations are very backward to take the cup, but drink it they must. So I can say to the waiting ones who have heard my testimony on these great truths, Lift up your heads, for your redemption is nearing, yea, it hasteth greatly.

If time should last over the coming spring, I think some of you will hear me say, "Behold he cometh." I was worn out before I was taken down with the ague and fever, so it takes some time for one of my age to recover. Bro. Stockman prayed in the Kempton St. church yesterday that I might gain my health and strength so I could stand in that desk and preach the Word again. I was not able to go, it was so cold. The friend that told me of his prayer believed it would be answered, and I said Amen.

Brethren, pray for me, as you have done in the past. I am very grateful for the sympathy manifested for me in my distress. I want to say something in behalf of poor afflicted ministers, but I must leave that for another letter. I have felt for them in my confinement. Church of God, do not let them suffer while you have plenty. God bless you all, shall ever be the prayer of your brother waiting for redemption.

New Bedford, Dec. 11th, 1876.

From Bro. W. H. McCarty.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I take this method of saying to friends of like precious faith, that I am striving in my weakness to do the will of the blessed Master, and to have a home in that blessed mansion which Christ has gone to prepare for all those who love him. I truly believe that according to the signs of the times, the Savior will soon leave the mediatorial throne to execute judgment on all them that dwell on the earth, and at that time every one will be delivered whose name is written in the Lamb's book of life.

Oh, my dear brethren, let us live near to Christ, that we may be safely housed in Israel's chamber, for the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth. I am doing all that I can to save the perishing and to present to them present truth; but the time has come when they will not endure sound doctrine. I meet with much opposition from the leading sects, but there are a few that have the courage to stand the scoffs and frowns of the world. Pray for us that we may stand fast even unto death, and that when Christ who is our life shall appear we may also appear with him in glory.

I am poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and an heir to the everlasting kingdom of God. I would say to the brethren that if they have any books or tracts that will help me to study the Word, they would be very thankfully received. I am thankful for the nice reference Bible sent me. I hope God will bless Bro. Adams.

I look forward to the time with bright anticipation when we that are scattered all over the land shall be gathered under one parental care in the kingdom of God. Oh! how my heart swells with gratitude to God when I think of the blessed rest prepared for the people of God. But I must close by asking the friends to pray for me and my loved companion, that we may ever be found faithful, not having on our own righteousness, but that which is through faith in Christ, and that we, with the rest of God's dear ones, may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Father and his dear Son, who died to redeem us out of every kindred, and will make us kings and priests unto our God, and we will reign with him forever.

Cowker City, Mitchell Co., Kansas.

From Bro. Francis Plummer.

The multiplication of our power is in obeying the word of God and the Spirit. Every time we quench the Spirit we lose strength. Do we realize what strength is ours if we will have it? Has not our Savior entered into the strong man's house and bound him and spoiled his goods? Yes, he was stronger than the strong man, and has taken all his armor wherein he trusted. Having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them. When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men. He gave his disciples power over all the power of the enemy, and the keys of the kingdom of heaven.

Let us stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and not be entangled with the yoke of bondage, from which we have been set free, nor turn to elements that are weak and beggarly. But let us be rooted and built up in Christ; then we shall bring forth fruit to perfection. There are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, and by these roots we are made partakers of the divine nature.

Weary and tried children, how much more of the divine nature you possess than those who cannot claim the promises that are very precious to you. May our heavenly Father help us to adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things, and fortify our strength.

Laconia, N. H.

From Sr. L. Dammon.

Bro. Couch:—Please permit me through the Crisis to say to all interested, that the Lord hath heard the voice of supplication and prayer in my behalf. Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live. I was brought low, and he helped me. What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people. Praise the Lord! I began to amend about the time husband's request appeared in the Crisis, and have been gaining very fast ever since, to the surprise of all who saw me during my severe illness.

Still at our son's home in Hinesburgh, Vt., where we expect to remain for a few weeks, waiting upon the Lord, with willing hearts and ready hands to know and do the whole will of God, in whatever service we may be permitted to bear some humble part.

Pray for us still, that we may not be ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God to every believing heart. Yours, praying for a complete baptism of that power.

Hinesburgh, Vt.

From M. E. Lorpabel.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Jesus:—I saw the Editor's exhortation in the Crisis of Nov. 15, to work more for Jesus. It aroused me to fresh hope, and I am determined to try and do what I can. I wish to say to those who are scattered far and wide, let us stand up bravely for our Savior and make his service the principal business of our lives. If we profess to be his true children, why not put on the whole armor of Christ, and serve him with our whole heart and soul? Surely Jesus is worthy of our whole hearted service.

If we do this we will find ourselves so bound up with Jesus and his work, that it will seem as if he were really leading us day and night. Try this close walk with God, and you will then experience that holy security, which never has been and never will be found in any other way. May God help us all to gain eternal life.

Cross Plains.

From Bro. A. B. Farnham.

Editor of Crisis:—Dear Bro:—I want to tell the brothers and sisters through your paper what the Lord has done and is still doing for the people in this place.

We have a small church here, one year old, and our members are steadily increasing. There is a good interest here, which is mostly due to the labor of Bro. H. S. Mitchell. With all the discouragements, he has held the fort, and the Lord has blest his labors. The best of all is, we believe the Lord is soon to come. Pray for us that we may be ready to meet him with joy. May the Lord help us to live right, in this present world, so that when the Master comes we shall be ready to meet him.

Rockland, Me.

From Bro. T. B. Hartt.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I am almost alone in the faith in this place. There are but a few Adventists in this part of the world; but I am doing the best I can, serving the Lord and presenting the truth to the people. I am looking for Jesus to come soon, and mean to be ready. I desire the prayers of all God's people to sustain me in living for the Lord. I want the Crisis. Please inform me how I can send the money safely.

Obituaries.

Grant. In Torrington, Conn., Sept. 10th, 1876, Howard A. Grant, aged twenty-nine years.

The circumstances attending the death of our young friend demand more than a passing notice. It was his custom to return home on Sabbath morning and spend the day with his parents at church. They watched and waited for him on each returning Sabbath. He came as usual on the morning of the 10th of Sept., and accompanied his mother to church, sang both morning and afternoon in the choir, of which he was a faithful and useful member, and in the Sunday-school he selected and requested all to sing,

"I will sing you a song of that beautiful land,
The far away home of the soul."

It seemed almost that he had a glimpse of that land. He was a sweet singer, and his voice is missed in our songs of praise. He was a regular attendant at church, and an attentive listener to the Word of Life. On the day above mentioned young Grant returned to his home, after church, with his mother, dined with them, and left them again about half past three o'clock, and in one hour he was no more. He was killed by the cars on the Naugatuck Railroad. His own father, happening to be on the train on his return from grove meeting, was among the first to find his own son lifeless, but he knew him not. That was a sad night at Bro. Grant's house.

The funeral was on the following Tuesday, and a very large assemblage of people, more than filling the Congregational church, gathered to pay their tribute to the memory of him whom they had known to love. The stroke falls heavily upon the father and mother, and their many friends are praying that the God of all grace may bring comfort to their sorrowing hearts. Services by the writer. C. P. Croft.

Smith. In Corinna, Me., August 6th, 1876, Elizabeth, wife of Bro. Daniel J. Smith, formerly of London, N. H., aged sixty-three years.

Our dear suffering Sister S. has gone down in peace and sleeps in Jesus. She had been an invalid twenty-six years; for the last seven years had been confined to her chair; but she loved God and his people, and the ordinances of his house. Our weekly prayer meeting was long held at her room, and to her they always seemed like an oasis in the desert. She never failed to bear her testimony, and her last will never be forgotten by those who were present. But her work is done, her sufferings ended. She has shed her last tear, given her last warning to the unsaved of her family, and commended them all, with her life, to Him who has the power to ransom from the grave. O joyful thought! O blessed hope! to cheer the heart of our brother in his loneliness, as he sits in silence beside the vacant chair, after so many years of unceasing anxious toil and care, by day and night, for a suffering wife. May God bless him with the two sons that remain, and bring them with us at last to share in the victories of Christ's death.

"I yearn for that morn when the dead saints shall wear
Their glorified bodies, and long to be there."

A. C. Times, please copy. L. Dammon.

Streeter. In Worcester, Mass., at the residence of John P. Streeter, of brain fever, causing congestion on the brain, Lucy Ann, wife of Hiram B. Streeter, of Southbridge, Mass., aged forty-seven years.

The subject of the above notice was converted and baptized, with the writer, by Bro. S. Bragg, in the spring of 1851. Thus, being a Sister in Christ, she always seemed very near to us. She and her husband left their home in Southbridge to visit friends in Worcester, that they had not visited for six years. Arriving at the above named place she was confined to her bed, where she lay in great pain until death ended her sufferings. Her husband and two sons have met with a great loss. Her funeral was attended by the writer, at Worcester, where she died. May this sad and sudden affliction be sanctified to the good of the lonely ones. Oh! what is home without a mother? Geo. A. Streeter.

Bowles. At Sugar Hill, N. H., Dec. 6th, 1876, Bro. David W. Bowles, aged fifty-six years.

He was converted under the labors of Elder Silas Gaskell in 1841; and when the light of the soon coming of the Lord shone on his pathway, he embraced it with all his heart, and maintained his faithfulness unto the end of life. He filled the offices of deacon and clerk of the church for many years. His companion and children suffer the loss of a kind husband and father; the church, one of its oldest and most active members. We know not how to be deprived of his counsel. His faith was that the Savior would very soon appear. As he repeated Isa. 57: 1 but a short time before his death, we thought it the foundation of our remarks. N. Wheeler.

Newell. In Whitefield, N. H., Oct. 12th, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Mr. Joel S. Newell, aged sixty-one years.

Bro. N. has been afflicted with a consumptive complaint for several years, and has been deprived of many privileges; yet he, with his companion, was not deprived of reading God's Word, and coming boldly to the throne of grace. He was a man of quiet, sober thought, and had confidence in the Word of God. O how they miss him at home! Yet they are "saved by hope." The Baptists kindly offered their large chapel, where we addressed on Sunday, the 15th, some six hundred persons, who came out to pay their last tribute of respect to the deceased, and hear the Word of God proclaimed. Text, Psa. 30: 5. N. Wheeler.

Hoyt. In Magog, P. Q., Canada, Nov. 12th, 1876, Jemima F., widow of the late Samuel Hoyt, after a painful illness of nearly a year's continuance, caused by a cancer, which finally caused her death.

Much of her life has been a scene of unrest. Many have been her afflictions, yet the Lord thus far has delivered her out of them all, and she sank to rest, aged seventy-seven years, in sure and certain hope of a resurrection to eternal life, when her deliverance will be complete. She leaves a feeble, afflicted daughter, a son, and other relatives to mourn her loss. May God sustain and bless them. Sermon by the writer from Job 14: 1–3. C. P. Dow.

Hunt. In Franconia, N. H., Nov. 23d, Mr. Ora Hunt, aged eighteen years.

He was a son of kind and affectionate heart, and the pillar of a fond mother's earthly hope. We were called to his bedside a few hours before his death, and on asking him what petition he wished us to offer in his behalf, he replied with much calmness,—"that my sins be forgiven me." We retired after offering the petition, believing that such a request would be granted. At the funeral we spoke from Acts 2: 39. N. Wheeler.

Carter. In Boscawen, N. H., Dec. 4th, 1876, Mr. Harvey Carter, aged sixty-six years.

In his last sickness, his wife told us he prayed every night. We trust he found the Savior. May God bless his wife in her loneliness, and may they meet in the kingdom of God when Jesus comes. Sermon by the writer, from Job 14: 14. Simeon Roby.

Welch. In Topsham, Vt., Nov. 10th, 1876, of long illness, Sr. Celinda, wife of Lebben Welch, aged sixty-two years.

She sleeps in Jesus, and will awake soon, to die no more forever. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Job 14: 15. D. D. Page.

Lord. In North Shrewsbury, Vt., Aug. 28th, 1876, Lovell Elbert Lord, son of Luther and Celestia Lord, aged two years and three months. Wm. J. Blanchard.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Bucharest, Dec. 14. The official Gazette publishes a decree creating eight new regiments of infantry, the formation of which begins on the first of January. The present infantry force of Roumania is only eight regiments.

Paris, Dec. 14. It is rumored on the Bourse here that Constantinople advices have been received of a two months' prolongation of the armistice.

New York, Dec. 14. A Constantinople special says one proposal before the conference is for the Russians to occupy Servia, Roumania and Bulgaria; another is for a joint occupation of Bulgaria by the powers.

Constantinople, Dec. 14. With regard to the disarmament of the Mahometans, Russia's views do not appear, from what Gen. Ignatieff says, as absolute as was supposed, the tendency being to place the Christians and Mahometans on the same footing. Russia's views about Bulgaria, however, are more extreme. She seems to consider that all districts inhabited by Bulgarians should be considered as included in Bulgaria. If this view is accepted Bulgaria would comprise more than a half of Turkey.

London, Dec. 14. A telegram from Bucharest reports that the Russians are forming a vast fortified camp at Bender. The work is going on night and day. Stores in great quantities are accumulating there and at Tiraspol. Large barracks are being constructed at Taletze and Ungheny.

A Vienna special to the Daily News says the Grand Duke Nicholas has asked a reserve force of 100,000 men. Their mobilization has already commenced at St. Petersburg and Moscow.

It is said if the Russian troops, as expected, enter Roumania shortly, the movement will not be accompanied by a declaration of war on Turkey.

Munster, Prussia, Dec. 14. Bishop Brinkman and Dr. Giest have been sentenced to imprisonment, the former for a year and the latter two years, nominally for withholding public documents and embezzlement. Their real offence was disobedience of the ecclesiastical laws. Two priests were also sentenced to short terms of imprisonment.

London, Dec. 14. Dispatches from Berlin state that there is no prospect of a compromise between the Imperial Government and the Reichstag on the judicial laws. The Berlin correspondent of the Post says: The Government has absolutely refused to make any compromise.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 12. A Gazette special from Texaskana gives the particulars of a terrible explosion of the boilers in a saw mill near that place yesterday. Nine men were killed, named Chauncy Beach, James May, W. White, Nicholas Rosebaugh, Edward Griffin, George Green, Tip Stewart, George Jackson and Fred Williams. Two colored men, named Custer and Johnson, were dangerously wounded. The mill was one of the largest in the State. At the time of the disaster it was running at full power. The property was totally destroyed. Loss $8000.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and faithfulness in sacred duties. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of all these. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 30 cts. per dozen, by mail.

Address I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

☞For sale as above at the Crisis Office.

ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES.

This is an ably conducted weekly paper, edited by Elder Frank Burr, and published under the auspices of the Western A. C. Publishing Society. It gives prominence to the personal coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of sinners, and the eternal salvation of saints on the renovated earth. It also insists on a holy life as essential to an admittance into the coming kingdom. $2.20 a year. Address Advent Christian Times, 91 South Green St., Chicago, Ill. The World's Crisis and Adv. Chris. Times sent postpaid to subscribers who will take both, at the reduced rate of $4.00 per year in advance for both papers. Address World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Notices.

Vermonters, Read.—More labor is demanded in the mission fields in this State than we have funds to pay the expenses of. There are back pledges unpaid, some of which have been standing some time. These should be paid, as they are much needed. Send on at once, and save us the expense of visiting you personally to collect these pledges. There are flattering fields opening for building up churches, and we hope the brethren of this State will not let the work drag heavily for want of funds. Let the laity sacrifice with the preachers and the work will prosper. Send to me at Morrisville, Vt., or to J. T. Edson, East Roxbury, Vt. A. A. Hoyt, 1st Elder.

Notice.—An adjourned session of the Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec will convene at Magog, P. Q., Thursday, at 10½ a. m., Jan. 4th, 1877, for the transaction of the following business: 1. To adopt an amended form of its Constitution, as voted at the last session, and published in the Crisis of Oct. 14th, 1876. 2. To elect a full board of officers. 3. To take a deed of the Lake View camp-ground, as already arranged. 4. To appoint a Campmeeting Committee. 5. To elect a delegate, or delegates, for the next August Convention of the A. C. Association, to be held in Chelsea, Mass. 6. Miscellaneous business. We hope for a full attendance of all interested, all members of the Conference especially; and all others who can unite upon the basis proposed.

Dear brethren, united we stand, divided we fall. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer. Northern Vermont and New Hampshire can unite with us if they think best. C. P. Dow. E. C. Orcutt.

Notice.—There will be a Conference at East Washburn, Me., commencing Friday, Dec. 29th, and continuing over the Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all, both ministers and people, to come and labor for the upbuilding of the church of Christ and the salvation of sinners. E. I. Crouse, Secretary.

Notice.—The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held in Richmond (Reed meeting-house) evening, Dec. 28th. The preaching brethren belonging to Conference are especially requested to attend. Let all come filled with the Spirit, and labor for salvation. Will Brn. Baker and Hall come? H. D. Reed.

Dedication.

The A. C. Church just completed at Sparta, Morrow Co., Ohio, will be dedicated to the worship of God on Sunday, Dec. 31st, at 10.30 a. m. Bro. Grant will be present with the great Map of History, and continue meetings as the Lord may direct. Bro. Burr and others are also expected to be present and assist in the services. Let there be a general rally to this meeting. The church extend a hearty invitation to all to come.

In behalf of the church, E. M'Culloch, Pastor.

P. S. Those coming from the North will take the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. to Fredericktown, arriving at midday. Be sure and write to John Blinn, Sparta, Morrow Co., Ohio, at least five days previous, what time to meet them, and how many are coming. Those coming over the Cleveland and Columbus R. R. will be met at Cardington by writing to Bro. Blinn as above. E. M.

Quarterly Meeting.—By order of Directors the first Quarterly Meeting of the Lay Association of Advent believers of Iowa will be held at New Hartford, commencing on the evening of the 18th of January, 1877, and holding over Lord's day. Judging from the numerous responses received from brethren in Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska since the Convention, we think we have taken a step in the right direction, and we look for a glorious meeting. We extend a cordial invitation to all God's faithful and patient ministers. Come with your flowing bowls and let the famishing souls be filled. Come, ye isolated ones; come all that love the Lord. Bring in all the tithes and offerings, and try the Lord, and see if we do not receive the blessing. B. Banton, Sec.

Notice.—If the Lord will, a Protracted Meeting will be held at Abington, Conn., Wednesday, Dec. 27th, at two o'clock p. m., and continue over the Lord's day. We expect to take some action at this meeting that will unite more closely the churches of East Connecticut in the work of God. Let all churches interested be present, ready to act for Christ. Pray for the meeting. H. Davis.

Notice.—The next session of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York will be held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, Jan. 26th, 1877, and holding over the following Sunday. Come one and all. Let us have a spiritual meeting. A. H. Briggs, President.

District Meeting.—The Farnham District Meeting will be held at the Stone school-house, near Bro. Eri Jewell's, East Farnham, to commence (D. V.) Friday evening, Dec. 22d, at seven o'clock, and continue its sessions over Christmas day, Dec. 25th. A good attendance is earnestly desired. Let all come who can and join to worship God and speak of his kingdom, now so near. All our ministers who can are expected to attend. See that the churches in the District are well represented. C. P. Dow. L. Marsh. E. G. Chadsey.

Notice.—The first Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church, known as the Lawrence and Leavenworth Conference, will convene with the church at Reno, Leavenworth Co., Kansas, Friday evening, Jan. 19th, 1877, to hold over Lord's day. All are invited to attend. A. C. Siler, Sec.

Notice.—There will be a Protracted Meeting of the A. C. Church, held with the Salt Creek Church, at the Little school-house in Republic Co., Kansas, commencing Dec. 28th, and holding over two Sundays. The North Western Quarterly Conference of Kansas will meet some time during the meeting at the call of the President. Eld. J. C. Smith, the State Evangelist, is expected to be present. Everybody is cordially invited to attend, and all ministering brethren are requested to be present to help preach the Word.

Thos. R. Comstock, Sec. of the N. W. Quar. Conf. of Kansas.

Notice.—At the last annual meeting of the Vermont Conference, a resolution was passed to encourage the churches to take up collections once in four weeks to aid the State Missionary work. Let this work be attended to. H. B. Quimby, Recorder.

Notice.—I would say to those churches who have requested me to preach for them, that I am now at liberty to do so, as the Lord may open the way. Address me at 61 Bellevue Avenue, Providence, R. I. A. W. Sibley.

Notice.—There will be a Watch Meeting held by the Advent Church in Bristol, Ct. Brethren and sisters in the adjoining towns are cordially invited to join with us. Accommodations will be provided for any who wish to stay all night. Wm. Reynolds, Sec.

Notice.—Sister McKinstry has been engaged to supply the church at Beebe Plain, P. Q., with preaching one half the time. The pulpit is occupied the remainder of the time by other denominations.

Notice.—I am now sick, and can give no appointments until I am better. Pray for me. G. L. Tracy.

Those wishing to preach at Bonny Eagle will please correspond with C. F. Rumery.

Attention All, Please!

I have a proposal to make. Who will help in this matter? Several important facts have come to my knowledge, which leads me to make the following offer. With gratitude to God I learn that the "History of the Second Advent Message" has been put into several college and seminary libraries, where the results are clearly manifest in awakening some of the "faculty" and students to investigate and become especially interested in the doctrine of Christ's coming and kindred truths. They express surprise that such an amount of mission work has been done in this form, and such men of known ability and piety engaged in it while they were ignorant of it. It has also fallen into the hands of several ministers of different churches, where the results are the same. I am convinced that much good can be done by awakening such men as stand in the front of society. I want to sacrifice some to help it along. It is now the special season to make gifts to friends for two months to come. The retail price of the History is $3.50. Postage is now 20 cts. on each. The actual cost of the book to me in publishing was $3.00 each. I now offer one hundred copies of it to be ordered before Jan. 1st, 1877, to any persons who will order to give to libraries of Institutions, or other public libraries, or who will keep them to lend to ministers and other readers, or who will give them to ministers, for $2.50 each, postpaid. No others should expect them at this price, as it is 70 cts. less than cost on each. Address all such orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following Resolution was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass.

A LIST OF NEW BOOKS,

JUST RECEIVED FROM

KELLAWAY & CO.'S ENGLISH REPOSITORY.

FOR SALE AT THE OFFICE OF

"THE ADV. CHRIS. PUB. SOCIETY,"

144 Hanover Street.

Persons purchasing from the following list, help in so doing to sustain the English Repository.

Biblical Psychology. Written by an English Lawyer now deceased. An almost incomparable book on the nature of Man and his state in death. Our Preachers should secure it. Only a small remnant left. Published at $5.25; reduced to $2.50; postage 16c.

Earnest Words for Honest Skeptics. By the author of "Bible Triumphant." If possible, it even excels that work. Very interesting. 75 cts.; postage 5c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment. Fifth edition. By Rev. H. Constable, M. A., late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. A standard book. $1; postage 8c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of Man. Second edition. 367 pages. Also a standard work. It contains vastly more than the first edition. $1.25; postage 7c.

Restitution of all Things—the "all things spoken of by the Prophets who have been since the world began." Not restoration of the wicked. A capital book to read, or give away. A good supply is on hand for this purpose. 16 cts; postage 2c.

Discussion on the State of Man in Death. An interesting debate, with double propositions, and affirmations as well as negatives on both sides. Held between Bro. W. Kellaway and a Congregational minister. Useful to scatter. Good supply. Cloth 50 cts., postage 5c; paper cover 30 cts, postage 3c.

The Bible Triumphant; being a Reply to an Infidel Work entitled "144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible." Has sold long, is well known, and still much called for. Needs no recommendation. Cloth 70 cts., postage 4c; paper cover 50 cts., postage 3c.

Report of Large Conditional Immortality Meeting held in London May 15th, 1876. Only a few copies. 25 cts; postage 2c.

Hell according to Scripture. By S. F. Pells. With Notes by W. Kellaway. For thoughtful readers. A good supply. 10 cts; postage 1c.

Hope of Life Eternal. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts; postage 2c.

Catholic Apostolic Church (Irvingism): Its Pretensions and Claims considered in connection with the facts of its history, and the teaching of the New Testament and early Christian Antiquity. Cloth limp, 65 cts.

Reasons why all Christians should read God's written Word in Greek. 25 cts.

Spur and Encouragement to the Study of the Greek of the New Testament. 18 cts.

Christianity, and its Relation to Judaism. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts.

Tracts.

We have for some time been unable to supply orders for some of the following Tracts, which are so well suited for plentiful distribution; but have now a large quantity on hand. It will be seen too that there are many new ones in the list.

A very old Sermon, preached in England fifteen hundred years ago. It teaches that we go to Christ "after our resurrection." Old style of spelling. Three copies, postpaid, 10 cts.

The New Jerusalem: Poetry, a Criticism, and Scripture. By W. Kellaway. Envelope size. Enamelled wrapper. Six for 25 cts.

"Thy Kingdom Come!" or, the Kingdom of God not yet established on the Earth. By W. Kellaway. Same style as the foregoing. Six for 25 cts.

The Deep Importance of the Re-standing from the Dead. By R. Ashcroft, Congregational Minister, England. Six copies for 40 cts.

Chaos, Kosmos, The Kingdom of Darkness and the Kingdom of God. By E. White, M. A. Our Earth's history from beginning to end. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

Who Art Thou that Judgest? A Letter addressed to one, but applicable to many. By Joseph Stratford, Minister of the Gospel. A Rebuke with Doctrine of such as are cruel in their treatment of Christians holding life in Jesus. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

Scripturd Doctrine of a Future Life. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 50 cts.

Life Everlasting. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 25 cts.

Dialogue between a Predestinarian and his Friend. A lot of valuable extracts. 12 copies for 25 cts.

Life and Death. Extract from Archbishop Whateley's "Future Life." 20 copies for 25 cts.

Immortality. Extracts from numerous authors on Life and Immortality by the Lord Christ. By H. Constable, M. A. Enlarged by Bro. W. Kellaway. 20 copies for 25 cts.

Immortality only in Christ. A concise presentation of the truth stated in its title, in twenty-three paragraphs and extracts from Fathers. 20 copies for 25 cts.

The Undesirableness of Death. By D. T. Taylor. With "Death and Immortality," by W. Kellaway. 20 copies for 25 cts.

The four Tracts immediately preceding are very valuable, and we have some thousands in hand to meet demands.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

An answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a book of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It is having a wide circulation. We have just received a quantity of the pamphlet edition, and can now fill orders at the following prices: Pamphlet, 25 cts. per copy; $2.25 per dozen by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Bound in cloth, 30 cts. per copy by mail; $3.00 per dozen by express. Ag't.

THE VISION.

A. C. PRINDLE.

I had a vision strangely bright,
A vision, blending earth with heaven;
So gently, that I never deemed
The mystic veil was still unriven.

I mingled with the ransomed throng;
My lyre, immortal, chimed with theirs;
My voice exultant joined the song
Which rose sublime from myriad choirs.

The throng adoring cast their crowns
In honor at the Savior's feet;
'Twas then I saw that mine alone
Of all that band was incomplete.

No jewel glittered on its crest,
Reflecting radiance from the throne;
I stood among the garnered sheaves
Redeemed, but with a starless crown.

I felt I had no right to share
The wond'rous joys to laborers given;
Their crowns were bright with many stars,
Saved souls they'd won from vice to heaven.

The vision changed. I turned away
In sorrow from the happy throng,
And earthward did my footsteps tend,
Fraught with a mission, noble, strong.

I saw the ripened harvest spread
Wide as the world, the reapers few;
I joined the number, and with joy
Did glean till eve brought star and dew.

I shunned no path the Savior led;
Faith was my guide, my refuge prayer;
I sought among the haunts of vice,
And found my brightest jewels there.

Again the mystic dream is changed;
Again with saints in heaven I bow;
I do not mind my crown or stars,
For Jesus has my homage now.

In joy I cast it at his feet,
His love had set its every gem
Firm and eternal as the stars
Which sparkle in his diadem.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

WM. KELLAWAY.

SPIRITUALISM TENDS TO MADNESS.

The Globe newspaper, treating of Spiritualism, speaks of it as conducive to madness. Its own language is:

"Although Spiritualism has made considerable progress in Europe, it is in the United States that its votaries are most numerous, and in that country, according to Dr. Winslow, no fewer than ten thousand persons have gone insane on the subject, and are confined in public asylums. Dr. Winslow frankly declares that 'all who really believe, and who persuade others, that they see or hear a spirit, are the subjects of hallucination and auricular delusions, and should be taken care of by their friends.' He adds: 'It is a well known fact that, in America, the mediums become haggard idiots, mad, or stupid; but the main point for the community to observe is that a like fate awaits the more feeble-minded of their auditors. The fact ought surely to exert considerable influence on public opinion. We certainly do not approve of prosecutions which give a factitious importance to the 'movement'; but those who encourage it out of curiosity ought to remember that they are encouraging what has done incalculable evil to many thousands of adherents, and if it does not die out may very soon do the like harm to as many thousands more."

How far the above is true you will know better than myself; but the leading newspapers of England—of which the Globe is one—are generally careful what authors they quote, and use considerable caution in the investigation of statements. If it is a fact that Spiritualism tends to madness, it is a terrible commentary upon the "black art"; and it shows that God's prohibition of invocation of spirits or any sort of dealings with them, does not rest upon a caprice of sovereignty but upon a knowledge of what is for our real welfare. I can quite imagine that Spiritualism, when persistently practised, may upset sanity, destroying the normal equilibrium of the brain; for any thing that causes such a tension of the faculties, one would think, could not be anything but injurious. So, if this stands—that Spiritualism drives a person to the lunatic asylum—here is another reason, a reason founded in nature, that should strengthen our decision to give it a severe letting alone. There is a better kind of Spiritualism than this, as every one of us knows who knows what it is to lift up the heart in love and prayer to God. That will not make mad, but take what madness there may be in us out of us, as it did out of the man who, healed by Jesus, was presently clothed and in his right mind, sitting at the Master's feet, and being taught of him.

LONG HOURS, HARD WORK, AND SMALL PAY.

We all have to do with the world, and are yet in the "evil age." It may not therefore be unprofitable to point out a characteristic of this our day. Indeed, it must be necessary, seeing that an apostle, moved by the Holy Spirit, has done it before us, and told us it is a mark that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Long hours, hard work, and small pay, is a characteristic of the world just now. This was suggested to my mind by an incident that has just transpired in London.

A servant of the Metropolitan Omnibus Company, whose duty it is to stand for fourteen hours a day on a step at the back of an omnibus for seven days in a week, to assist ladies and gentlemen in and out of the coach, take fares, register same, etc., has been placed in dock to answer a charge of stealing. In the trial it came out that the man made ninety-eight working hours a week in all seasons,—in summer's sun and dust, and winter's cold, blow, frost, hail and rain,—for which he received the handsome remuneration of 96 cents per diem, or $5.76 a week, gold. Out of this he had to meet all the expenses incidental to dear city life, and probably to keep a family. I understand there are no perquisites. As the man had the handling of the money, he sometimes stole fares that were given him for the Company. Undoubtedly he did wrong. But was there no wrong on the side of the Company in giving him so small remuneration as to cause him to be tempted to steal? And this is why our day comes to be more beset with temptations than many in the past,—it is such like things that try us that our forefathers were not tried with.

Then the poor were regarded as the household of the land-owner, and their interests were so thought of. Now the case is different. The Spirit, through James, has well described our times in this particular. He talks of "hire of laborers kept back by fraud," and of the cry of those who have been defrauded of their deserts entering into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth. Are there brethren reading this who have been thus defrauded, and whose life has in consequence been a career of anguish? "Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." And to all employers of labor would I say, Be not involved in the sin of the men James speaks of—"Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal."

OMENS OF WAR.

Some journals are crying "Peace, peace," just as Israel's lying prophets of old, against whom Jeremiah pronounced such dreadful woes, and whose character he so vividly drew. The armistice and peace! If this is really so, what we now see are very strange assurances that the peace is to be kept. Russia mobolizes a large part of her army, and has forbidden the exportation of horses. Her reserves are being drilled, and all her officers remaining in Servia ordered home. Her Czar speaks words of "peace if possible, war if necessary"; but hinting that it will be necessary if she cannot have all her own way. The Russians call back to the throne that they are ready. Some of the wealthy promise immense contributions to the war chest. War clouds that erewhile were the merest specks now cover all the heavens. Yes, there is war ahead! Russia says that these are "precautionary measures," simply to show her determination to have real reforms. The Lion (England) growls back to Russia. It is said that he has grown somewhat toothless with old age. But if there is war, the truth or untruth of this will appear. If war were the end it would be bad indeed. But "the end is not yet." The Lord is at hand, and the end of the age is at his advent. Then shall come a new era. But let us not mistake the present: the ambition and fury of unrenewed hearts are aroused, and possibly but a short time after this is printed the collision may have begun. Let us stand ready for the form of the Master in the midst of the storm. For he will surely come while "the sea and the waves are roaring."

FIFTY THOUSAND "REPORTS" SCATTERED.

Through the liberality of some gentleman whose name has not come to the surface, fifty thousand copies of the Report of the Conditional Immortality Conference, held in May last at the Cannon-Street Hotel, have been struck off, and are being distributed to "every christian minister in the United Kingdom, and to every English missionary in the world."

It is "recommended to their prayerful and attentive perusal." So wide a sowing of seed must bring some sort of a harvest. Certain it is, that the word of God, thus brought under the notice of so vast a multitude of teachers, will in no instance return to Him who is the author of the Word empty. It will be loaded with blessing, or return to their condemnation. The former would much more gratify our heart than the latter. May the merciful Lord take notice of our desires, and add his blessing.

10 Warwick Lane, London, England.

EXTRACT OF A SERMON BY THE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

"But none saith, Where is God my Maker, who giveth songs in the night?"—JOB 35: 10.

There is never so dark a night, but there is something to sing about, even concerning that night; for there is one thing I am sure we can sing about, let the night be ever so dark, and that is, "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, and because his compassions fail not."

If we cannot sing very loud, yet we can sing in a low tune, something like this: "He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities." "Oh," says one, "I do not know where to get my dinner from to-morrow. I am a poor wretch." So you may be, my friend, but you are not so poor as you deserve to be. Do not be offended about that; if you are, you are no child of God; for the child of God acknowledges that he has no right to the least of God's mercies, but that they come through the channel of grace alone.

We have no cause to murmur; we can lift up our hands, and say, "Night thou art dark, but thou mightest have been darker. I am poor, but if I could not have been poorer, I might have been sick. I am poor and sick—well, I have some friend left; my lot cannot be so bad, but it might have been worse." And, therefore, christian, you will always have one thing to sing about: "Lord, I thank thee, it is not all darkness." Besides, christian, however dark the night is, there is always a star or moon. There is scarce ever a night that we have, but there are just one or two little lamps burning up there. However dark it may be, I think you may find some comfort, some little joy, some little mercy left, and some little promise to cheer thy spirit.

The stars are not put out, are they? Nay, if thou canst not see them they are there; but, methinks, one or two must be shining on thee; therefore give God a song in the night. If thou hast only one star, bless God for that one—perhaps he will make it two; and, if thou hast only two stars, bless God twice for the two stars—and perhaps he will make them four. Try, then, if thou canst not find a song in the night.

But, beloved, there is another thing of which we can sing yet more sweetly; and that is, we can sing of the day that is to come. I am preaching to-night for the poor weavers of Spitalfields. Perhaps there are not to be found a class of men in London who are suffering a darker night than they are; for while many classes have been befriended and defended, there are a few who speak up for them, and (if I am rightly informed), they are generally ground down within an inch of their lives.

In an inquiry by the House of Commons some time ago, it was given in evidence, that their average wages amount to seven or eight shillings a week; and then they have to furnish themselves with a room, and work at expensive articles, which the ladies are wearing now, and which they buy as cheaply as possible; but perhaps they do not know that they are made with the blood and bones and marrow of the Spitalfields weavers, who, many of them, work for less than man ought to have to subsist upon. I was conversing with some of them, and one said,

"Well, sir, it is very hard, but I hope there is better times coming for us."

"Well, my friend," I said, "I am afraid you cannot hope for much better times until the Lord Jesus Christ comes a second time."

"That is just what we hope for," said he. "We do not see there is any chance of deliverance, unless the Lord Jesus Christ comes to establish his kingdom upon earth; and then he will judge the oppressed, and break the oppressors in pieces with an iron rod, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

I was glad my friend had got a song in the night, and was singing about the morning that was coming.

Often do I cheer myself with the thought of the Lord's second coming. We preach now, perhaps, with little success; "the kingdoms of this world" are not "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ;" we send out missionaries; they are for the most part unsuccessful. We are laboring, but we do not see the fruit of our labors. Well, what then? Try a little while; we shall not always labor in vain, or spend our strength for naught. A day is coming, and now is, when every minister of Christ shall speak with unction, when all the servants of Christ shall preach with power, and when colossal systems of heathenism shall tumble from their pedestals, and mighty, gigantic delusions shall be scattered to the winds. The shout shall be heard, "Alleluia! alleluia! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." For that day do I look; it is to the bright horizon of that second coming that I turn my eyes.

My anxious expectation is that the sweet Sun of righteousness will arise with healing beneath his wings, that the oppressed shall be righted, that despotism shall be cut down, that liberty shall be established, that peace shall be made lasting, and that the glorious liberty of the gospel of God shall be extended throughout the known world. Christian, if thou art in a night, think of the morrow; cheer up thy heart with the thought of the coming of thy Lord. Be patient, for,

"Lo! He comes with clouds descending."

Be patient! The husbandman waits until he reaps his harvest. Be patient; for you know who has said, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be."—Christian Herald.

THE DELUGE TABLET.

The publication in this country of a book by Mr. George Smith on recent discoveries in Assyria has given new interest to the marvelous story of his discovery and translation of the Chaldean inscriptions, so confirmatory of the Bible account of the flood. The story is well worth telling anew, with such additions as the more recent researches of Mr. Smith enable us to give.

The site of ancient Nineveh is covered with immense mounds, the largest and most interesting of which is called by the Arabs Koyunjik. It covers nearly one hundred acres, and varies in height from seventy to ninety feet. This mound attracted the attention of Mr. Layard, and, if we mistake not, he was the first of the excavators. From it he dug out those colossal winged bulls and eagle-headed monsters which fairly appall the visitors to the British museum. This mound proved to be a vast platform which bore up many palaces of gigantic proportions. The most beautiful of these was that of Ashur banipal. In the course of Layard's excavations he reached this palace. He found in it a series of rooms which he called "chambers of record." They were small apartments, filled with clay tablets, from one to nine inches in length, covered with fine writing. These tablets were sent to England and deposited in the British museum. This was seventeen years ago.

Among the learned men who devoted themselves to the mastery of these unknown writings was Mr. George Smith, pronounced by Sir Henry Rawlinson to be the greatest Assyrian scholar living. Many tablets were deciphered by him which were of great importance as having a direct bearing upon Bible history. In 1872 Mr. Smith came across a fragment which, to his amazement, belonged to a Chaldean account of the deluge. His eager search now was for the other portion. He was in part successful. Missing pieces were found to such an extent that the scholar was enabled to make out quite a connected narrative of the deluge, as recorded by the writer in stone.

The discovery and the translation formed the subject of a lecture by Mr. Smith before one of the learned societies of London. The interest awakened was intense. The proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, London, offered to advance $5000 to secure fresh researches at Nineveh. An expedition was equipped with Mr. Smith at its head. Many important discoveries were made, but the most interesting of all were of portions of the mutilated deluge narrative. The story, as now translated, is almost entire.

As to the age of the record, this can be said: The tablets themselves belong to the time of Ashur-banipal, who lived about 660 B. C. But the tablet-record is only a copy. The original text, as shown by the tablets, belonged to the city of Erech, which is mentioned in Gen. 10: 10. The date thus given to the Chaldean record is 2000 B. C. The narrative as translated by Mr. Smith is, perhaps, familiar to all scholars. For the benefit of the less learned readers we give it in an abbreviated form. It begins with a description of the building of a great ship in obedience to the command of the Deity.

The succeeding events are thus stated by Sissithnes (Noah): "All that I possessed of the seed of life I gathered together; the whole I made to enter my ship; all my servants, male and female, the tame animals of the fields, and the wild animals of the plains, and the young men of the army. And Samos (a deity) caused a great flood, and he spake, speaking in the darkness of the night: 'I will cause it to rain from the heavens abundantly; enter within the ship and close the door.' . . . I entered into the ship and shut its door. . . . The fury of the tempest arose in the morning. . . . Destruction marched over the mountains and the plains. . . . The flood of Bin touched the heavens; . . . the brilliant earth was changed to a desert . . . the waters destroyed all life from the earth. . . . I was borne over the sea. Those who had done wickedness, all the human race who had turned to sin, the bodies of these floated like reeds. . . . The ship was borne to the country of Nigir, and the mountain of Nigir arrested it. . . On the seventh day I sent forth a dove. And the dove flew away, and sought a place of rest; but it found none, and returned. I let go a swallow, and it flew away. It searched for place of rest, and found none and returned. I let loose a raven. The raven flew away, and it saw the dead bodies on the water, and it ate them; and it wandered a great way off, and it returned not. I let go animals to the four winds; I poured out a libation; I built an altar on the summit of the mountain."

The general parallel between this record and the Scriptural account is remarkable. What can be said of it? What can men who have laughed themselves hoarse at the Bible account of the deluge say of this new correlative testimony to the actual historical character of the event, and to the truthfulness of the Scriptural narrative of it?—Watchman and Reflector.

"Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—EPH. 5: 20.

"I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth."—PSA. 34: 1.

Thanksgiving and praise are so nearly allied that it would be difficult to separate them. It is that part of divine service which no doubt is the least thought of in these days, yet, very important and acceptable to God. Thanksgiving and praise will be heard from countless tongues of the redeemed throughout the unnumbered cycles of eternity. I do not think that the offering of this service should be confined to any particular time or place, as some suppose, but that it is both enjoined and our privilege to bless the Lord and give thanks unto his name at all times, as inculcated in our text.

If you wish to carry out this most beautiful part of religious service, as formerly, you may confine it to times and seasons, and indulge in it at the command of earthly rulers, of whom I know not one who rules in the fear of God. If Adventists feel free to join with the sects who adopt the man-made motto, "Worship you according to the dictates of your own conscience," and give attention to the mandates of ungodly rulers of earth, as to the matter, manner, where and when, sacrifices of praise or any other part of divine service should be offered, as is suggested by a brother in an article under this same heading, I, for one, as an Advent believer, most respectfully dissent. I cannot see how a waiting church, separated from the world and all its follies, can pay any attention to the commandments of men further than to be good law-abiding citizens.

The Church has nothing to do with these holy days which men have manufactured and set apart to be observed. She is called out from the world, separate and distinct. John 15: 19; 17: 14. These things may do for a backslidden and worldly church to participate in, but God's people who are working out their salvation with fear and trembling have something higher and nobler to engage their attention, and something better to live or feast on than these things can offer.

The texts which our brother offers in support of his advice, as being in harmony with Scripture, does not seem to be to the point. They have no reference to religious matters whatever, but refer exclusively to civil affairs.

As regards thanksgiving with the sincere followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, with them every day is a day of thanksgiving and praise, as our text indicates; and they wait not on men to call them to the exercise of this service, however high they stand in civil power. They prefer to obey God rather than man in these matters. Christ is their Head, and Governor, and President, and King, and it is at his behests and commands they obey and go forward. I would say in conclusion, that the great Thanksgiving day of the people of God will be introduced under the soundings of the seventh trumpet, when the kingdom of this world shall become our Lord's and his Christ's, and he shall reign forever and ever.

Then the voice of thanksgiving and praise shall go up from the lips of redeemed millions, and loud hallelujahs shall ring out through this lower creation, and a feast will be made (Isa. 25: 6) that shall last more than a day, month, or year, in which the saints of all ages shall joyfully participate.

By his grace may God prepare us for that happy day.

ALWAYS HAPPY.

J. W. BRITTAN.

I have often told my brethren that I am always happy, that nothing troubles me, that I do not worry, I have done complaining. I am happy whether I have little or much. I am content with such things as I have; and the Lord says, I will supply all your need; you shall not want any good thing. Everything works for my good.

Why should I complain? If I am sick and very poorly in health I take pleasure in my infirmities, and necessities, and distresses, for the power of Christ rests upon me. Why should I worry when I have nothing to worry about? I have given all things into the hands of the Lord, and he says he will take care of it, and I believe it. I have no trouble. If I am smitten on one cheek I turn the other. If they compel me to go a mile I go two. If they take away my cloak I will give my coat. If they say all manner of evil against me falsely I will leap for joy.

If we follow Christ, our enemies will have all the trouble, and we shall have perfect peace. The devil is subject to me, he is a conquered foe. No fight with him but the fight of faith. Satan fires his darts, but the shield of faith makes them powerless. I am begotten of God, and am kept, and that wicked one toucheth me not. I am exceedingly joyful in all my tribulations. I count it all joy when I fall into divers temptations, for I know they are for my good. O! I do rejoice, and will rejoice always. I am careful for nothing, but in everything give thanks, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding keeps my heart and mind through Christ Jesus.

Let me say, in conclusion, the reason why I have not enjoyed this blessed experience in years that are past is, I have been too much like a tree that depended on the soil in which it grew; but now I am like a tree pulled up by the roots, and I am dead to all human dependence, to all worldly policy, and I am like a vessel in mid ocean, out of sight of land and never expecting to return.

I am crucified with Christ. I cease to live as I once lived. I have died, and Christ lives in me. O! grace, grace, all of grace. O what a mystery to the worldly-minded that a man can be dead indeed to the world and sin and all alive in Christ!

Westboro, Nov. 25th.

WHAT preaching can more effectually set forth the excellency of saving grace, or exalt its virtue, than a humble, patient, self-denying life? Such preachers of righteousness evince to carnal professors that there is a God that still ruleth in the hearts of the children of men, and if yielded to, effects the great and glorious work of sanctification.

A DREAM, OR VISION.

Dear Bro. Couch:—I will write a dream, or vision which I had twenty-four years ago last March. I thought I was standing on a hill that overlooked a large cemetery, when all at once the last trump sounded. Terror took hold of my whole being. I looked up, and far off in the distant horizon I saw a white cloud approaching, and as it came nearer it increased in size and brightness, until the sun was lost to my view and the stars wandered away. The cloud took the form of a throne, beautiful in sculpture beyond description. And one in glistening raiment, with a crown upon his head, stood upon the throne and beckoned with his hand to the earth.

The graves opened, and the dead came forth clothed in shining white robes, and were escorted by a host of angels, until they disappeared in the brightness around the throne. Earth and sky vibrated with songs of joy and the music of harps. A dismal cloud descended to the earth, parted from the light by a hair line, and then more graves opened and the dead came forth, having on spotted robes, and were borne by an irresistible power into the cloud of darkness. And I heard these words—"These shall go away into outer darkness."

I heard voices, and looking again I saw men, women and children wringing their hands, their features distorted, their hair disheveled, running towards a precipice of ragged rocks towering high into the heavens. And they said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

I tried to bury myself in earth, and had partly succeeded, when a friend took me by the hand, and I awoke, trembling like Belshazzar when he saw the hand writing on the wall.

The next day a friend called me away from my comrades and talked with me about Jesus and the "life to come." My heart melted like wax in the sun. Well, I was converted, and the doctrine of the second coming of Christ to raise the dead, judge the world, and crown his saints, is firmly established in my mind. Not a day has gone by since but I think of the glory of that scene, and with joy anticipate its approach. S. H. V. BELLOWS.

WHEN WILL CHRIST COME?

THOS. FITZSIMMONS.

This question, when will Christ come? is answered in the Scriptures, notwithstanding all denial to the contrary, in the great troubles, wonders and national events, that they give as the sure signs of his near approach, and of which our Lord tells us—And when ye see these things come to pass, then lift up your heads and rejoice, and know that your redemption is at hand, even at the door. These words are very plain.

Now it is profitable to know what these signs are that presage his advent near, that we may not be taken unawares. There are many errors of judgment that may be repaired, but this error, unprepared for his coming, cannot be repaired. The Scriptures declare that the Son of man will come in a season of abounding wickedness, and demoralization in society and governments, and give us an illustration, the days of Noah, as the counterpart of his coming in the latter time.

The Son of man will come in a time of great political agitation, and distress and perplexity of nations, when revolutionary outbursts and wars shall usurp human and divine laws, and religious persecution and bloodshed shall make the earth no longer fit for the dwelling of his elect people. He will come in a time of general apostacy and falling away from the faith and teachings of the Bible; when men have turned to fables, and question God's right to rule or govern them.

He will come at the downfall of the Turkish Empire, symbolized in Scriptures as "the drying up of the river Euphrates;" when, he tells us,—"Behold, I come as a thief, keep your garments, lest ye walk naked;" showing the almost simultaneous occurrence of these two events. He will come when "the great Antichrist," the false shepherd who deserts the flock, is in the boasted zenith of his blasphemous and persecuting reign over the then nearly subjugated earth.

He will come when people are scoffing at his coming, and crying "peace and safety;" for he says, "And then sudden destruction shall come upon them and they shall not escape." He will come, also, when a general cry of his people is ringing through Christendom,—the midnight cry over a slumbering world. The Lord is coming, and his people, the few and small, are expecting and waiting for him.

He will come after the plagues and awful punishments on mankind of the last seven vials, have been poured out, when many shall be purged and made white and saved, while others shall not repent of their sins, but blaspheme the God of heaven for their pains, which shall be very great.

He will come finally, when the impious and Satan-led nations and armies of the earth, are assembled at Armageddon, the valley of decision, and throw down the gauntlet of battle to the very God of heaven, man having reached the climax of his blasphemy and human pride. "And in that day his feet shall stand on Mount Olivet." And so Christ answers this question in over fifty texts of Scripture, when he will come. He says, "And when ye shall see these things come to pass, then lift up your heads and rejoice, and know your redemption is at hand, even at the door."

Reader, how many of these signs are already fulfilled, or fast fulfilling to-day? Is not the Lord near?

THE POWER OF THE BIBLE.

The chief duty of Protestantism is with the Scriptures. It is clearly to declare and publish them abroad. Neither attacks upon the Papacy, nor polemics against infidelity, are our most important work. If we can only pour the light of the Scriptures clear and in full-orbed glory upon the world, all the power of the Papacy will vanish as the night before the morning, and the forms of infidelity disappear as glow-worms cease to shine when the day has come.

The Bible does not need any defense, so much as it needs proclamation. It defends itself wherever it is known. Deep in every soul there dwells forever a witness to the truth, whose clear eye and steady voice will see and respond to it wherever it is known. We do not need to implore men to believe the truth. We only need that they shall apprehend it, and then we may defy them to deny it. And thus the Bible, as eternal truth, needs no other argument for its support than itself clearly preached.

There are defenders of the truth who think otherwise. They treat the Bible as a weakly infant, which must be bolstered up and carefully sustained, lest it fall. And so they bring together their learning and their philosophy, their human reasoning and research, which they use as proof to keep the Bible up, trembling all the while lest one of these should fail, and the truth, unsupported, sink to its hurt. But the Bible disdains all these appliances. It is no weakly infant. It has more than a giant's strength, and cannot only stand unsided, but can walk forth alone conquering and to conquer.—Prof. Seelye.

REPORT OF HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.

According to appointment the members and others comprised in the district of the H. V. Conference, met with the church at Castleton, Vt., for a four day's meeting, commencing Wednesday evening, Oct. 25th, and holding over the Sabbath following. Throughout all of the meetings there was a good degree of religious interest manifested.

They consisted of prayer and conference meetings, with preaching during the afternoon and evening, mostly by Elds. Waite, Flagg and Blanchard. There were three business sessions of the Conference, which were presided over by the President, H. K. Flagg.

The following are the preachers who were present as members of the Conference: Elds. S. G. Mathewson, of Castleton, Vt.; H. K. Flagg, of Savoy, Mass.; Arthur A. Waite, of Sandy Hill, N. Y.; and Wm. J. Blanchard, of Pownal, Vt.

The following are the church represented at this Conference by delegates: Hebron, N. Y., Oscar Munson, Erwin Woodward and D. W. Lincoln; Sandy Hill, N. Y., Allen Dewey, Jacob Pike, Truman T. Hill, and S. French; North Fort Ann, T. L. Condon, and Edgar Granges; Rutland, Vt., E. D. Brown, N. G. Howard, C. L. Mason, Joseph Davis, and S. Henry; Castleton, Vt., J. Graham, D. C. Atwood, H. Castle, C. Sanford, and C. S. Sherman; No. Shrewsbury, Vt., P. G. Lord; Low Hampton, N. Y., H. Phelps; Poultney, Vt., Bro. Austin; Hoosick, N. Y., J. B. White; and also as members of Conf., Robert Candlish, Sec.; and Dea. S. D. Hutchins, one of the Ministerial Com., both of Rutland, Vt.

The following are the officers chosen for the ensuing year: President, Eld. S. G. Mathewson, of Castleton, Vt.; Vice President, Eld. H. K. Flagg, of Savoy, Mass.; Treasurer, J. B. White, of Hoosick Falls, N. Y.; Secretary, Eld. Arthur A. Waite, of Sandy Hill, N. Y. Ministerial Committee: Elds. S. G. Mathewson, Wm. J. Blanchard, and Dea. S. D. Hutchins.

There were four delegates chosen for the ensuing year to represent the churches of this Conference at the meetings of our National Association; S. G. Mathewson, H. K. Flagg, Robert Candlish, and Arthur A. Waite.

Wm. J. Blanchard and Cornelius Pike of Massena, N. Y., were chosen as a Tent Committee to take charge of, and run the tent; and Elds. S. G. Mathewson, H. K. Flagg, Wm. J. Blanchard, Arthur A. Waite, and Cornelius Pike, were chosen as a protracted meeting committee.

In consequence of the extended territory embraced in this Conference, it was voted to hold this year two semi-annual Conferences instead of four, as heretofore.

Interesting letters were read and adopted from Eld. A. O. Higley, of Bennington, Vt.; Eld. Cornelius Pike, of Massena, N. Y.; and Sr. M. L. Tower, of No. Adams, Mass.

The business meetings were harmonious, and characterized throughout with a good degree of christian spirit.

Near the close of the last session, a hearty vote of thanks was given to the church of Castleton for their generous hospitality extended to us during our stay with them. It was voted to send a synoptical report of the general proceedings of this Conference to the World's Crisis and the Advent Christian Times.

It was then voted to adjourn to the call of the President and Secretary.

BEGIN THE DAY WITH PRAYER.—Every day should be commenced with God. The busiest and the best man in Jerusalem was wont to say, "In the morning will I direct my prayer to thee, and will look up." "I will sing aloud to thy mercy in the morning." Daniel, too, saluted his God with prayer and praise at early dawn. We begin the day unwisely and at great risk to ourselves if we leave our chamber without a secret conference with our Almighty Friend. Every christian, when he puts on his clothes, should also put on his spiritual armor. Before the day's march begins he should gather up a portion of heavenly manna to feed the inner man. The mercies of the night and the new resurrection of the dawn both prompt a devout soul to thankfulness.—Ex.

ADVERSITY.—It takes a touch of adversity to show whether a man is a man at all, just as it needs the touch of frost to bring out the glories of the trees. Even on a dark day in October how royally the woods flame out! Under what glorious banners they march to meet the winter! What unmatched splendors, rich as sunset skies, tender as the rainbow, shine out over the whole earth! Those splendors are the treasures that the trees were silently laying up when the summer's sun flooded them all day long. And shall a man, in his time of prosperity, lay up no store of sunshine in his inner self, whereby, when darker days come on, he shall be luminous with courage and good cheer.—Ex.

ROCK OF AGES.—The church fears nothing that blow-pipe, or telescope, or microscope can reveal. Make the fires hotter, exalt the power of the telescope, and intensify that of the microscope, so that the veil may be lifted from the yet unseen; the church will stand by the unveiling, and put every flashing truth in the crown of Him who is "Lord of all." It will but add to her joy and faith.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

DO NOT think so much about denying yourself and living holily; but seek to lose yourself in the love of God. When love to him warms and fills the heart, love will exercise self-denial, without ever thinking of it. Walk in communion with God, and you will walk in holiness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

POISONED.

To-day has gone another victim of foul air. Again, in a home of plenty and affection, the pride and joy of all hearts lies dead—of foul air. The parents are broken-hearted. She was their only daughter—and such a daughter! Any parent might well rejoice in such a possession. Hard, indeed, would they take it to be told that they poisoned her to death. Yet such is the fact. And, further, they are so poisoning their son, their only remaining child, and themselves also. How they have any of them managed to live until now, is a wonder. They must have been endowed by nature with iron constitutions, or they would long ago have fallen.

It was sad to see, a few hours ago, the hurry and rush there was in that house. The room of death was at once cleared, the bed turned out of doors; the windows may be opened now that no one in the chamber needs pure air. The still form is elsewhere. We thought as we saw the neighbors and friends so busy changing all things and making ready for the funeral, that we would she might speak in warning to those that are left behind.

"Open your windows," she would say. "Thin out the occupants of your chambers. Take out the cotton from the cracks of doors and windows, and remove the curtains from around your beds. Be less afraid that my brother may take cold than that he breathe impure air. Look well to ventilation, to the paper on your walls; change it often; see to your drains, your out-houses, your meadows, that seeds of death do not ripen in them. Be lavish of water; be careful to bathe often. O my mother, had you spent less time in cooking needless and hurtful things, less time in polishing stoves and lamp-chimneys, and more time in studying the laws of health, I might be with you in the bloom of my youth to day."—Ex.

FRUIT FOR FOOD.

Dr. M. L. Holbrook, a good while ago, in speaking of fruits as food said: "There is one other value in fruit, which I cannot pass over in this connection without notice. One of the common diseases of children is worms in the bowels. If a child's digestion becomes impaired, and the gastric juice becomes weakened or defective in quantity by over eating or bad food, the whole alimentary canal becomes clogged up and filthy, and furnishes nests for such worms as will breed there. In the weakened condition of the system, they cannot be destroyed by progress of digestion, and hence great harm comes from them. Now it is an interesting fact that fresh ripe fruit is the best preventive for this state of things.

Dr. Benjamin Rush pointed this out a hundred years ago. He made a series of experiments on earth worms, which he regarged as more nearly allied to those that infest the bowels of children than any other, with a view to test their power of retaining life under the influence of various substances that might be used as worm medicines. The results proved that worms often live longer in those substances known as poisonous than in some of the most harmless articles of food. For instance, in watery solutions of opium they live eleven minutes; in infusion of pink root, thirty-three minutes; in claret wine ten minmtes; but in the juice of red cherries they died in six minutes; black cherries, in five minutes; red currants, in three minutes; gooseberries, in four minutes; whortleberries, in seven minutes; and raspberries, in five minutes.

From these experiments Dr. Rush argued that fresh ripe fruit, of which children are very fond, are the most speedy and effectual poisons for worms. In practice this theory has proved to be correct.—Ex.

OATMEAL.

In Great Britain children of all ranks are raised on an oatmeal diet alone, because it causes them to grow strong and healthful, and no better food can possibly be found for them. It is also quite as desirable for the student as for the laborer, and for the delicate lady as for her hard-working sister; indeed, all classes would be greatly benefitted by its use, and dyspepsia, with all its manifold annoyances, can be kept at a distance. Oatmeal is more substantial food, it is said, than veal, pork or lamb, and quite equal to beef and mutton, giving as much or more mental vigor, while its great desideratum consists in one's not becoming weary of it, for it is as welcome for breakfast or tea as is wheat or graham bread. It can be eaten with syrup and butter as hasty pudding, or with cream and sugar, like rice. It is especially good for young mothers, upon whose nervous forces too great a demand has been made, and they lose the equilibrium of the system and become depressed and dispirited. Oatmeal requires to be cooked slowly, and the water should be boiling hot when it is stirred in.—Ex.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

W. KELLAWAY.

To-day is for digging and sowing,
And wat'ring the seed-corn with tears;
For working, in view of the harvest,
With courage, undaunted by fears:
To-morrow's the ball of the gladness
Bedizened with lights lit for aye;
The tasting the fruit of the harvest
And singing the songs of the gay.

Then rouse, brother, rouse to the labor!
Up, up to the work whilst 'tis day!
The night will be speedily on thee,
The season for work pass away!
And what if thy task by thy Master
Shall in the to-morrow be seen,
By the light of its clear-breaking morning,
Neglected, undone, to have been?

O brother, then at it! yes, at it!
Though fast falls the sweat from thy face,
Though oft faints thy strength in the semblage,
Yet give not to idleness place:
Relax not thy hand, nor the labor
Of heart or of brain in Christ's cause;
And then, when the Master appeareth,
Most joyfully, then, shalt thou pause.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

C. C. MORSE.

Much has been said about the Holy Spirit by professors, as well as by the sacred Scriptures. Like any other important truth, our comfort will largely depend upon a correct understanding of it, and its relations to us. Also as to what point in our christian experience we should expect it. For our Father is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to those that ask him than an earthly parent is to give good gifts unto his children. He does not leave so precious a gift so vague and indefinite that the honest seeker is bewildered and dismayed, and does not know but what he has lost it without knowing it, and not knowing certain that he ever had it. For it seems some look for unscriptural manifestations of it, and because they do not receive according to their expectations they take a lower seat, and continue to do so; and do not receive what is really the legacy of God's children. Jesus, while he was on the earth, promised his disciples a Comforter (John 14: 18–26), which is the Holy Spirit. It was then in the future, and when near the time of his ascension he directed them to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. Luke 24: 49. In the first chapter of Acts, 4th verse, the promise is again referred to as not having been fulfilled, but it speaks of the promise of John the Baptist (Acts 5: 5), and adds, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."

Now, it was not because the apostles were not good enough to have the Holy Spirit, for they had forsaken all and followed him. And Jesus testifies that their names were written in the Lamb's book of life. But the time had not arrived, for they were to tarry in Jerusalem. Christ instructed them that repentance and remission of sins should be preached to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. Luke 24: 47. So then, we should not teach that we occupy a position like the apostles, for even when they were faithfully following the Savior they did not have it, for the reason that the time of the fulfillment of the promise had not arrived.

But the time came when Jesus sent the Comforter, and the event was so marked with power and happy results that no one could mistake it. According to the direction of their Master they were to stay at Jerusalem until the promise, the power, the Holy Spirit was upon them. In about the space of ten days, while they were in Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost, we find them all filled with the Holy Ghost. In that condition they were to be taught all things and all things brought to their remembrance whatsoever Jesus had said unto them. John 14: 26. Thus it is as in the great discourse preached before more than three thousand persons, in obedience to the Lord's instruction.

After a very complete argument, Peter condemns the multitude by saying, "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ. Acts 2: 38. Now, when they heard this they were pricked in their heart and said to Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren what shall we do? At this crisis we might expect an answer full and complete, in perfect harmony with the great commission of Jesus. Mark 16; 16. Peter gives just such an answer as we might expect from one that knew the mind of his Master, and it would be a safe answer to anyone who wanted to know how to be saved. In the answer it was not necessary for Peter to require them to believe, for they already felt convicted of sin, and desired to know what they should do; and in this case it was unnecessary for Peter to require them to believe, although believing necessarily comes before repentance. Peter answered, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. And it is made a continuous rule of practice and promise to the end of the world. "For the promise is to you and your children, and to them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Now, did those persons who were obedient receive the Holy Spirit at that time, or months and years after, or when they came to die? Certainly, all would say, as soon as they were baptized into Christ. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Gal. 3: 27. No one could live a christian a year, month, or even a day, without the Spirit of Christ. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

Now, if any of the three thousand who had obeyed the Lord according to the words of Peter had been asked if they had received the gift of the Holy Spirit, if they had confidence in the words of Peter, and faith in the Word of God, they would have said, yes. And so can we with equal confidence, and will feel that blessedness that such confidence inspires. No person ought to claim that they have the gift of the Holy Spirit before they believe; for Paul testifies to the Ephesians that it was after they believed that they were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise.

Some might have in their minds Acts 8: 14, and onward, where it is stated that some that were baptized in the name of Jesus had not received the Holy Ghost, and for that purpose it was necessary for Peter and John to pray for, and lay hands on them that they might receive the Holy Spirit. They did receive something that was brought about by the laying on of the apostles hands; for Simon thought to purchase this power, for he perceived it was greater than the sorceries with which he bewitched the people.

Now, then, was this something the same as brought to light in Acts 2: 38, where it was promised if they would obey they should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit? Does it seem evident that there was a special power given to the apostles, and to those to whom they desired to communicate that power, that is not given to all believers? such as the power to perform miracles and speak in tongues, as that power always followed the laying on of the apostles hands, and never without it, except in the case of the apostles themselves, and of Cornelius, of whom we will speak again. It was necessary for the apostles to go from Jerusalem to Samaria to impart that gift, which would not have been necessary to have fulfilled the promise in Acts 2: 38, any more than it would be necessary for us to receive the laying on of hands in order to have the Holy Spirit. The gift of miracles and tongues was for a sign for them that believe not.

In Acts 19: 2–7, some have thought they have found where persons have been believers and christians and did not have the Holy Spirit. But with careful reading we will see that their condition was such that they had to be re-baptized; evidently they were baptized by John's disciples after that baptism was out of date or had expired by limitation; and they were in the same condition as though they had not been baptized. After they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus according to the direction of Paul, they received the promise as given by Peter in Acts 2: 38. In this case these twelve received the added blessing of being able to prophecy and speak with tongues after the laying on of the apostles hands.

The case of Cornelius (Acts 10: 11), is the only case in the Bible since the day of Pentecost, in which it is said anyone received the gift of the Holy Spirit before they were obedient. And as this case is peculiar in other respects, it is not strange that it should be in this, especially when we can find a good reason for it. Cornelius was the first Gentile convert. The thousands that were converted were of the Jews, who retained their early prejudice againt the Gentiles, Peter testifying that it was an unlawful thing for a Jew to keep company or come unto one of another nation. Peter's prejudice seems to be partly overcome by the vision he had while in a trance; but that would not have been sufficient for those six brethren who accompanied Peter, or his brethren in Jerusalem. They might have been incredulous of God's willingness to receive Gentiles, if they had only the testimony of Peter's vision, but as God always gives ample testimony to the honest seeker, so he gave Peter and his brethren confidence to go and tell Cornelius and his house words by which he might be saved, by giving them the outward manifestations of the Holy Spirit, as a sign that he had granted to the Gentiles repentance and life; for Peter hears them speaking in tongues and magnifying God, and exclaims, "Who can forbid water, that these should not be baptized who have received the Holy Spirit, as it fell on us in the beginning?" And when the history of this case was rehearsed before his contentious brethren in Jerusalem, they glorified God that repentance unto life was granted unto the Gentiles. So, then, this baptism of the Holy Spirit (Acts 11: 18), was for a sign that God had received the Gentiles, and not as a precedent that a sinner must have the gift of the Holy Spirit before he is obedient. When one goes forward with a full purpose of heart in obedience to God, he is pardoned, and receives the gift of the Holy Spirit. Christ then owns and blesses him, and that he could not do if he did not have his Spirit. "For if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." He is his with it. He is not his without it. And no man receives remission of sins without belonging to the Lord, and he does not belong to the Lord unless he has his Spirit.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

E. C. BRONAUGH.

Whether words are used in a literal or figurative sense in the book of Revelations is to be determined from the context. When used in a figurative sense the following words, it is submitted, have the attached significations, to wit: A woman signifies a church, true or false. Examples: The woman of Rev. 12: 1, signifies Christ's true church, while the woman of Rev. 17: 3–5, signifies the false Romish church.

Heaven signifies the location or place of the true church in the figurative moral universe. Example: In Rev. 12: 1, the woman was seen in heaven.

The bottomless pit signifies the location or place exactly opposite to heaven; and is therefore the place from whence proceeds infidel opposition to Christ. Examples: When the bottomless pit of Rev. 9: 1, was opened, the Infidel locust swarms of the Saracens came forth. The beast which ascended out of the bottomless pit (Rev. 11: 7) was the Infidel French Republic.

When the bottomless pit (Rev. 20: 1–3) inclosed Satan, Infidel opposition to Christ ceased in the Roman world until the pit was opened again as in chap. 11: 7.

The earth signifies established government. Example: The papal beast of Rev. 13: 11, came up out of the established government in the days of Justinian.

The sea signifies peoples in revolutionary commotions. Example: The Pagan Roman Empire arose out of the sea. Rev. 13: 1. That is, came into being as the result of revolutions among the nations within its geographical boundaries.

The winds signify war, and the four winds extensive wars among many nations. Examples: As the result of such wars and revolutions each of the four great kingdoms of Dan. 7: 2, Babylon, Russia, Greece and Rome were founded. The European alliance between the four nations—Russia, Prussia, Austria and England in 1815, symbolized by the four angels of Rev. 7: 1, has held in check the blowing of the four winds since its formation.

A beast signifies a political or civil government. Examples: The beasts of Daniel, the beast of Rev. 13: 1, Pagan Rome; the beast of Rev. 13: 11, Papal Rome having combined civil and ecclesiastical dominions, as also in Dan. 7th.

The sun, the religion of Christ.

The moon, the Jewish religion.

A star, a person prominent in the church. Example: The woman, or true church (Rev. 12: 1) was clothed with the sun or religion of Christ, was standing upon the moon or Jewish religion, and had a crown of twelve stars (the twelve apostles) on her head.

Fire signifies religious zeal. Example: Rev. 13: 13. Popery caused the fire of religious zeal to descend from heaven, the place of the church, to the earth, the established government; and the civil power of Rome in its zeal for the false church persecuted the true church. Rev. 13th chap. The angel having power over fire (Rev. 14: 18) signifies the threatened religious war in the East, until blood shall flow to the horse bridles, the four winds being loosed.

A special salvation and escape from the terrors accompanying that last great struggle is promised to those who in purity of heart and life are looking for and prepared for the Lord's coming. "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Rev. 3: 10. See James 5: 7, 8; 1 Thess. 3–10; 2 Thess. 3: 5; Heb. 10: 30–37.

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Isa. 26: 20, 21.

"And they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut." Matt. 26; 10. "And he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God." Rev. 19: 15, 17, 18. Compare Rev. 14: 18–20, and chapter 16: 16, 18, 19.

How shall the faithful "wise virgins" escape all these things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of man? "And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth: and the earth was reaped." Rev. 14: 15–17. Mark, this reaping will take place before the great religious war of verses 17, 18, 19, 20.

"The field is the world, the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. The Son of man shall send forth his angels and sever the wicked from among the just." Matt. 13: 38, 39, 41, 49. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24: 31. "I tell you in that night there shall be two men in one bed; one shall be taken and the other left. Two women shall be grinding together: the one shall be taken and the other left. Two men shall be in the field: the one shall be taken and the other left. Luke 17: 34–36. Matt. 24: 40, 41. "But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up." Matt. 24: 43.

Will good men then be left? "Afterward came also the other virgins saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not." Matt. 25: 11, 12. Mark, in Rev. 16: 15, his coming as a thief, to gather the harvest, is again located before the fearful scenes of Armageddon. And so in Rev. 19: 7–9, the marriage supper precedes the same terrible strife of verses 17, 18, 19. And now, instead of "a golden crown," as in Rev. 14: 14, which he wore before the harvest and the wedding, behold "on his head were many crowns" (chap. 19: 12) after the harvest and the wedding; "and the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses' clothed in fine linen, white and clean." Verse 14. "For the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Verse 9.

Reader, will you be taken or left? Decide at once. The time is short. Brethren, pray for me that I may be faithful.

WILL RUSSIA TAKE CONSTANTINOPLE?

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

There can hardly be a doubt that this is Russia's ambition, although the Czar Alexander disclaims any such purpose. The world believes most firmly that the ulterior purpose of Russia in her present aggressions on Turkey, in behalf of the Christians in its provinces, is the enhancement of her own power and dominion in the conquest of the royal seat of the old Byzantum empire. Contrary professions by the present Emperor weigh but little in the face of the avowed purpose of Russia, from the days of Catherine and Peter the Great, to secure "the key to her own house."

But the question may arise, if war is declared, Will Russia make a direct attack on Constantinople? This is hardly probable, from several considerations—:

1. It is extremely doubtful that Russia would risk the danger of defeat to her naval power in an attack on its strong defenses, even if combined with the co-operation of her land forces.

2. It would appear to be the better policy of Russia to secure the active co-operation of as many of the disaffected provinces of Turkey as possible, before making an attempt on its capital.

3. Judging from the past, her approaches having been gradual rather than precipitate, we think she will move with caution in her present designs to accomplish her purpose.

4. It is well known that for the past few years Russian operations have been mostly in Central Asia, with the vassalage of Persia, circumvallating Turkey on the East, evidently indicating her designs upon the latter power from that quarter as well as from the north.

5. Divine prophecy points to Central Asia as being the locality for the "pouring out" of the "sixth vial," the location of "the great river Euphrates" causing the "drying up" of its waters, "that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared"; indicating the great military movements of Russia in that quarter, being one great wing or division of her army, sweeping across Asia Minor and Syria into Palestine, while another grand division comes pouring down from the north over the Black Sea,—a great flank movement of Russia in that quarter to strike consternation into the heart of Turkey, while threatening the subjugation of her Asiatic possessions.

6. From a strict rendering of Dan. 11: 44, it very clearly conveys the fact of an exodus of the Turks from Europe. "And hearing tidings from the east, and from the north, shall horrify him, and he shall go out in great heat [wrath, anger] to destroy, and to devour [to consign to perdition] many. And he shall plant the tents of his palace between the seas to the mount of pleasantness of holiness; but he shall come in till his end, and not [shall be] any helping him."

This scripture is very significant, as expressing the geographical points of compass from whence comes most exasperating news to the Turks; and the expression, "He shall go out with great heat," very clearly conveys the thought of an exode from his capital, or the central seat of his power. As the movements of Russia have already shadowed forth her designs in the east as well as in the north, we may confidently expect the concentration of mighty armies rallying under the Russian standard in Asia Minor, threatening the extermination of Turkish rule in Asia, as well as in Europe.

Thus, while Constantinople may not be the direct point of attack, yet the strategical movements of the Russian armies may force the Turks out of Europe to defend their Asiatic possessions, and wreak vengeance on the mighty armies invading their country and threatening their existence.

7. There is reason for strong doubts to be entertained that the other great powers of Europe will permit Russia to take Constantinople; at least not at the beginning of the impending struggle; and perhaps the line of policy may yet be the joint occupation of the Turkish capital by each of the great powers of Europe, and become a bone of contention to involve all nations in the coming struggle—the conflict that will eventuate in the war of "that great day of God Almighty."

The finishing of the Turkish power in the world will be on the mountains of Israel, in the land of Palestine; and the special earthly agency in the hand of the Almighty One to hurl it into the very jaws of death, will be Russia, as is clearly indicated by prophetic utterances recorded many hundreds of years in the past.

As the scene of this great conflict is laid in Palestine, we may well turn our attention to that quarter of the world, and watch with intense interest the present conflict, that foreshadows the end of a power whose end is closely connected with the end of all earthly governments and kingdoms. Therefore Constantinople will be of little value to any of the nations when a few months, with their teeming events of unparalleled magnitude, shall disclose the great purpose of God concerning the destiny of the present nations of the earth.

Unquestionably Austria and Germany, as well as England, have a deep interest in the present struggle, and what is to be the future map of Europe in case Russia conquers Turkey; and they may hold Constantinople as a safeguard, and to dictate the terms of settlement as to the future division of Turkish territory. Therefore, by reason of manifest jealousy of each other, complications are likely to arise in the near future that will hasten a general war, involving all Europe in a deadly struggle as to who shall possess Constantinople and hold the key to the Eastern world.

As the expulsion of the Turks and the future possession of Constantinople have been considered for many years as the highest problem for European politics, we may well expect that the oscillating waves of the shock which is to engulf the empire of the Ottomans will be deeply felt through all the nations of Europe and the whole globe; and terrible consequences are associated with that eventuality. Thus, it is exceedingly doubtful whether any other nation will ever hold peaceable possession of Constantinople after the Turkish power falls.

Rome having passed through the changes of her history as foretold by divine prophecy, and Constantinople, the throne of the false prophet, formerly the imperial seat of the Roman empire from A. D. 329 to 1453, have evidently come to the very last stages of their existence, and their end will be reached amidst awful convulsions of war and political strife, now already looming up in the eastern horizon.

Having now reached the last stage of human affairs, these two central seats of long-continued empire are fraught with no common interest to the church of Christ, that love the prophetic Word, and see the sure tokens of their coming redemption in the developments of the present hour, confirming their faith in divine prophecy, and the sure realization of their hopes of everlasting deliverance and salvation awaiting them when the beast and the false prophet are overthrown. Christ is very soon coming to claim and take the sovereignty, not only of Rome and Constsntinople, but of all the earth; whose "dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." O that the church of Christ would arouse from her slumbers, and put on her beautiful garments, and go forth to meet her descending King and Bridegroom about to descend to take her to the marriage feast. Amen.

THE KINGDOM.

In the New Testament the phrases "Kingdom of Heaven, of Christ, and of God," mean the same thing. They are of frequent occurrence and of great importance throughout the whole New Testament. John the Baptist heralded this kingdom; Christ spoke continually concerning "the things of the kingdom," both before and after his death and resurrection. As a preacher he declared that he "was sent" for this purpose. Many of his parables set forth some aspect of this kingdom. He commanded his disciples to preach "the kingdom of heaven at hand." He taught them also to pray "Thy kingdom come." What is this kingdom? It is evidently of great importance for us get a correct, an intelligent and a definite idea of this kingdom. How often the prayer "Thy kingdom come" is on the lips, but how often the object of the petition in the mind of the petitioner is vague and imperfect and unscriptural. Is this kingdom the church in its present condition, the Christian dispensation, a principle, or the natural and universal government of God? No! none of these things, though it may include some of them. The gospel kingdom of promise and prophecy is a Messianic kingdom to be established on the earth under the millennial reign of "The King that comes in mercy,

The King that comes in might,
To terminate the evil,
And diadem the right."

Let us closely and briefly examine the principal texts which appear to some to teach that this kingdom has already been established. "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was offered to the Jews, rejected, "taken from them," and its establishment postponed. Prophecy takes but little note of time. "One day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Eighteen hundred years ago Jesus said, "Behold I come quickly." "Seek first the kingdom of God." The Savior here exhorts us so to live and act, that when it comes we may enter it as the penitent thief desired and as those on the right hand represented in Matt. 25th chapter, enter. "This generation shall not pass until all these things be fulfilled." Here, as often, the word generation means race, the Jewish race. "The kingdom of heaven is righteousness, etc. It is founded in these moral elements.

"There be some standing here that shall not taste death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." This evidently refers to the transfiguration, which soon followed. "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." We are "delivered" as yet only in part, and "translated" into heirs of this kingdom by faith. In a similar manner the dramatic present represents us as already "come unto Mt. Zion," etc. "The kingdom of God is within you." Since these words were spoken to the Pharisees, it certainly cannot be used to prove the internal locality and character of the kingdom. It simply means that the King unmanifested, was among them, and the principles of the kingdom were taught among them, or it was a dramatic present for a future. "My mind my kingdom is," may be a poetical, but it is not a Scriptural idea.

We need not wrest the Scriptures therefore to show, that while some of these passages might be consistent with a present kingdom, none of them clearly and positively teach it. On the other hand many passages to the end of Revelation, clearly and positively speak of this kingdom as wholly in the future. They show that the kingdom was not set up at the birth of Christ, nor on the day of Pentecost. Many of them were written long after these events. We must distinguish between God's universal kingdom, which existed when Daniel prophesied, and when Christ and the apostles preached, and this gospel kingdom. The Father has delivered the world as a revolted promise into the hands of a mediator, "for his inheritance," and by judgments and mercies he means to establish a special kingdom here. Christ on his last journey to Jerusalem said, "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return," signifying clearly his own departure, and return to establish his kingdom.

James calls believers heirs of a promised inheritance, signifying that they were not yet in possession of it. Paul speaks of them as "preserved unto God's heavenly kingdom." Peter exhorts believers so to walk that they may enter into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The New Testament nowhere calls the church in its present state, the kingdom of Christ, but teaches that this kingdom wil be established at his second personal appearing in judicial power and kingly glory. Daniel says, "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, . . . and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom." Paul says, "I charge, thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." With this also accords the parable of the nobleman. The kingdom comes with the king. This will be a real and visible kingdom, after the analogy of the four preceding kingdoms of Daniel; a theocracy, a dynasty over the souls, persons and property of men; a universal monarchy, blending all political, ecclesiastical and divine right and power; a resumption of Jehovah's immediate and rightful sway on earth. Daniel says, "In the days of these kings,"—not in the days of the king of the united Roman Empire eighteen hundred years ago, but in the days of the ten succeeding kings—"shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." Christ must sit on the throne of his father David. The Jews expected this from the teachings of their prophets. Christ did not correct this idea of the kingdom, but only postponed its establishment. This kingdom will be set up after great tribulation.

Daniel says: "And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

The Lord Jesus also says: "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."

The same fact is portrayed most graphically in the apocalypse. And at this period of supreme woe, just as Noah, Lot and the christians of Jerusalem were delivered, so will God's people be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air." The saints of God, "clad in immortality," will reign with Christ in this kingdom over the subdued and converted remnants of nations for a thousand happy years.

Daniel says: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the Most High."

With this also accord the plain declarations of Christ and the apostles. Having this clear and definite idea of the kingdom, with what intensity of desire should we pray that prayer, "Thy kingdom come!" It does not mean simply, let the church increase and the gospel gradually prevail in a spiritual reign, but let Satan's usurped dominion be overthrown, and let Christ's kingdom by a catastrophe of revolution be set up. Let the stone smite the image to powder, and let the kingdom come like lightning. This is surely promised, and let it be sounded out in the ears of the world, that there remains to-day no clearly defined event in prophecy between us and that great revolution.

By your zeal for the glory of God, whose name is continually blasphemed, and whose laws are trampled under foot, pray that prayer, "Thy kingdom come." By your love and gratitude towards Christ, pray that he may see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." By your yearning desire to see his radiant form, and to be like and with him, pray that prayer. By your pity for creation, groaning and traveling in pain, pray that prayer. Behold the nations of the earth, jealous as grim watch-wolves, warlike, restless, troubled, tempest-tossed, and not comforted, ever pursuing the vanishing fulfillment of a great hope; ever promising to the ear of sick humanity, and breaking the promise to the heart, and remembering that the sway of the Son of God from heaven affords the only hope of repose and salvation, and that this should be the supreme desire and prayer of all nations and all hearts. "Thy kingdom come." After you have prayed that prayer, go to work and hasten that kingdom. It will come in "the fullness of time." Let it be our high and glorious privilege "to preach this gospel of the kingdom to all nations for a witness," with supreme zeal and fidelity.—Christian Advocate.

REMEMBRANCE.

L. A. WHEELER.

"I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance."—2 Peter 1: 13.

The mind like the body is subject to decay, and must often be nourished to promote its growth or even to retain its present condition. In doing this, Peter did not always present new light, but often trimmed the lamp to keep the old burning. There are a great many things that God has wanted and still wants all his people to remember, and he has taken many and different ways to keep those things in their minds. From the time Abraham was called to leave his kindred and to go into a land that he knew not, many and wonderful were God's manifestations to that people, and to keep those evident interpositions of God's power and love fresh in their minds, the Psalmist, from time to time, rehearses many of them.

Much of the law given on Sinai was typical. The only object in taking the lives of those innocent lambs daily was to stir up their minds by putting them in remembrance of the Lamb of God that was to die that they might live. When the Lord took his people through the river Jordan on dry land, he told Joshua to command one man out of each tribe to take a stone out of the midst of the river and to carry it with them to the place where they should lodge, and there to set up together their twelve stones, so that future generations might see them, for a memorial of their fathers being brought through Jordan. Moses was so afraid that the Israelites might forget the law God had given them, that he had it re-written in a book, just before his death, and also commanded them that when they had passed over Jordan into the dry land God had given them, to set up large stones, and to plaster them with plaster, and to write the law upon them.

One of the offices of the Holy Spirit is to quicken the memory; Christ said it should teach them all things, and bring all things to their remembrance that he had said to them. The bread and wine, emblems of Christ's broken body for us, were designed to stir up our minds by putting us in remembrance of his death, until he comes. Peter says, "gird up the loins of your minds;" and Paul tells us to "exhort one another daily." There are great things ahead for overcomers. Let the sick contemplate perfect health, life, and that more abundant; the poor laborer, the earth's increase; the oppressed and down-trodden, a land of righteousness; those that are yearning for sympathy and love, the love of Him who gave his life for them, that they might live; the homeless and penniless, the Father's house with many mansions, the streets of gold, gates of pearl, and the garnished walls; the scanty clothed, the white robes; the mourners, death's destruction.

We may search the Scriptures to gather all that is revealed about what we shall be, think about it as much as our feeble powers are capable; and then, I imagine, we shall fall a great ways below the reality. The inducements being so great, let us all "hold fast" the sword, and not be forgetful hearers, but doers of the word; for there is great reward for the saint, also great punishment for the sinner. May God help us to remember.

HYPOCRITES.

One counterfeit note does not spoil a hundred good ones; it only makes us more careful to get the good ones and reject the bad. No man rejects a handful of gold coins because he has heard there are counterfeits in circulation. He simply tests them one by one, receives the genuine and refuses the spurious. The skeptic and the sinner are the only persons who reject genuine Christianity because of the worthlessness of its counterfeits; and who blame christians that serve God for the deviltries of hypocrites who serve the devil.

Says Dr. Payson, "Will you say that there are no real stars, because you sometimes see meteors fall which for a time appeared to be stars? Will you say that blossoms never produce fruit because many of them fall off, and some fruit which appeared sound is rotten to the core? Equally absurd is it to say that there is no such a thing as religion, because many who profess it fall away or prove to be hypocrites at heart. Or will you say that medicine is not good, because, though it removes the fever it does not restore the patient to perfect strength in an instant? Equally groundless and absurd is it to say that religion is not good because it does not make me at once as perfect as the angels of God."

The processess of divine life are sometimes slow, and the changes wrought by grace may not always be completed in a day. It doth not yet appear what we shall be. But when the saving work is wrought, eternity will show that God could have accomplished it.—The Christian.

WHO IS GOG?

"Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him.—EZEK. 38:2.

Dr. Keith was asked what he understood by the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. He said, "I unhesitatingly answered that in the Hebrew Bible and the Greek Septuagent the words are—'The prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal, or Russia, Muscovy [the Moschi], and Tobolski.' Mr. Swan, who has translated the Bible into the Mongolian language, speaking of this passage, said, "That is the more remarkable, as there is no such word as 'Tobolski' in the Mongolian language; the 'ski' being a mere Russian affix."

This testimony makes it certain that the prophet's eye saw, through the vista of revolving ages, the ruling prince of Russia. Smith says, "Meshech and Tubal were brethren of Magog; and no doubt their descendants were mingled. The posterity of Meshech peopled Cappadocia and Armenia. They sent colonies to the north, who were called the Moschi, or Muscovites." Smith on the Prophecies, Page 205. Again he says, "Martin, in his Philological Library, informs that Tubal was the father of the Russians."... "No doubt so many of the ancient posterity of Meshech and Tubal intermingled with their neighboring brethren, the posterity of Magog, and became one with them, that it was proper, in a prophetic hint, to add the names of Meshech and Tubal to that of Magog, to designate a distant and most interesting Empire of their descendants."

In commenting upon Gog, the chief prince, he says, "Gog is a natural abbreviation of Magog, and may naturally be taken as a mystic appellation of a terrible dynasty or government of some important empire of the descendants of Magog."

From these learned criticisms of the text quoted, it appears that the Russian government or its head, the Czar, is the predicted Gog. One great truth is clearly established by these prophecies of Ezekiel, and their parallels, as interpreted by nearly all expositors; i. e., that the Gog power is represented as becoming the great leading, controling government of the last days, forming a confederacy of nations which shall constitute a grand division of the armies to fight the last terrible battle.

Jeremiah evidently saw the same great leader in the final fray. He says: "Set up the standard toward Zion: retire, stay not: for I will bring evil from the north and a great destruction. The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate; and thy cities shall be laid waste, without an inhabitant." Jer. 4: 6, 7.

This passage presents a chief captain leading a host to Zion, "the glorious mountain," and he is called "the destroyer of the Gentiles." We consider it quite remarkable that, as we are informed by Guthrie, the noted leaders of the Russians in their early history should be called "the scourge of God and the destroyer of nations," when God calls the last chief of that people "the destroyer of the Gentiles."

Ezekiel describes the final overthrow of Gog in the land of Israel with these words: "And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face. For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel; so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground. And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone." Chap. 38: 18–21.

Jeremiah expresses the closing scenes in the last movement of the destroyer of the Gentiles with the following awful sentences: "I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled. I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger." Chap. 4: 23–25.

The parallelism is striking and positive. The events presented by both prophets are the same, and can take place but once in the history of our world. The general dissolution of the earth is presented, with the displacement of the "islands" and the overthrow of the "mountains," the universal and utter extinction of all living creatures—"fish," "fowl," "beasts," and "men"—from "the "face of the earth," the demolition of "all the cities," and the destruction of all vegetable life, so that the fruitful place shall "be a wilderness." Both prophets announce the wonderful truth that all these things shall take place in the "PRESENCE" of the Lord.

The work of revolution and destruction are represented as being accomplished by "shaking"—earthquake, "sword"—war, pestilence—"hailstones, fire and brimstone."

The Revelator evidently saw the same events and described them as follows: "And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Chap. 6: 14–17.

Again he says:—"Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon. And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great." Chap. 16: 15–20.

If any passages in the Scripture can be identified as parallels relating to the same subject, describing the same events, these can be; for they each express events of the same nature, involving the same nations, the scene of termination upon the same land; each expressing the fact that all will close in the "presence"—"face"—of the "Lord," the "Lamb."

These passages very clearly present four earthly governments as especially involved in the last great battle. Ezekiel presents "Gog"—Russia—and "Tarshish"—England. Jeremiah presents the "Destroyer of the Gentiles"—Russia—and the Lion—England. The Revelator presents the Euphrates power—Turkey—and great Babylon—Papacy. Ezekiel represents England as saying to Russia, after the great war has commenced, "Art thou come to take a spoil" ... to take a great spoil?" The language implies that Gog—the Czar—professed to move his "great army" for one object; but the sequel proved that his concealed object was to take a great spoil—great possessions.

There is, perhaps, no part of the Sacred Writings which is calculated, when well understood, to give to this generation more invulnerable proof of the divine inspiration of the Scriptures than that part treating upon this great subject.

Russia did not exist in its prophetic name, as an organized government, until about the year A. D., 860; therefore all the prophets foretelling its history, and giving it a national name, which they never heard pronounced of any people, had long slept in their graves before Gog held a sceptre. Of this Dr. Keith beautifully says, "Twenty-four centuries have passed away since a captive Jew, by the River Chebar, far from the land of his fathers, was the first to write the name of Rosh, and to record the mission and destiny of its prince and all his bands, in the latter days. It is by the force of his words that all these things are done, and by the light of the Word of the Father of lights, that we know that Russia will advance till the work of her preparation is finished, and they become a great people. She cannot stop if she would, till in all unconsciousness, the command to the prince of Rosh be completely obeyed.

CARGYLE ON THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Thomas Cargyle has written a letter on the "Eastern Question," published in the Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 28th, in which he speaks very plainly in relation to the course to be pursued with the Turkish power in Europe. He says:

"To undertake a war against Russia on behalf of the Turk it is evident to me would be nothing short of insanity; and has become, we may fondly hope, impossible for any Minister, or Prime Minister, that exists among us. Twenty years ago we already had a mad war in defense of the Turk; a mass of the most hideous and tragic stupidity, mismanagement, and disaster (in spite of the bravest fighting) that England was ever concerned in since I knew it; a hundred millions of money and above sixty thousand lives were spent in the enterprise. By treaties of Paris, etc., the Turk was preserved intact, binding himself only to reform his system of government, which certainly of all things in the world needed reform. And now, after twenty years of waiting, the Turk is found to have reformed nothing nor attempted to reform anything. Not to add that by bankrupt finance he has swallowed a disastrous tribute of many new millions from the widows and orphans of England. As finis to all which he has wound up by the horrors of Bulgaria and such savageries as are without a parallel.

With these weighty aggravations, the Turkish question returns upon us anew, and demands a solution. It seems to me that something very different from war on his behalf is what the Turk now pressingly needs from England and from all the world—namely, to be peremptorily informed that we can stand no more of his attempts to govern Europe, and that he must quam primum turn his face to the eastward, for ever quit this side of the Hellespont, and give up his arrogant ideas of governing anybody but himself.... The governing Turk, with all his Pashas and Basni-Bazouks, should at once be ordered to disappear from Europe and never to return. This result is in the long run inevitable, and it were better to set about it now than to temporize and haggle in the vain hope of doing it cheaper some other time."

Probably most of the civilized world will agree with Mr. Cargyle's views on the subject. It is evident that Turkey will not be allowed to go on with her persecutions as in other years. A change must take place in some way. It appears that her end is not far distant, but with her fall we may expect the close of Gentile times, and the beginning of the age of glory in the kingdom of God.

This is an hour of tragic interest to the inhabitants of this planet, yet but few realize their situation. Some are preparing for the great day of the Lord but most are as careless as were the Sodomites the day before their fiery destruction. Let every follower of Christ be awake in this hour of peril, and rescue as many as possible before they plunge to perdition.

PHILADELPHIA.

The revival tide is still rising in the Philphia meetings, which are held in the Methodist church, on Eighth Street, above Noble, where Bro. Litch and others preached the coming of the Lord in 1843. Since then, the Methodists have changed their meetings to another place, and the house is now owned by other parties. It is a very central and desirable place for meetings. New ones come to Jesus every evening. Many from the different churches are becoming more and more interested in the meetings, and are taking an active part in them, and some have decided to make this their permanent place for religious worship, because of the rich blessings they have received from the Lord, and because they have become so deeply interested the subject of the Lord's coming, holiness, and the other precious truths of the Bible, which have been turned aside by some ministers and churches. Backsliders are being reclaimed, infidels converted, and saints filled with the Holy Spirit. The Lord is pouring out his Spirit in a gracious manner.

Yesterday (Dec. 17th) fifteen were buried with Christ in baptism, making thirty-two in all. Others are now waiting for the next opportunity. Sixteen united with the church last evening, making thirty in all, since the commencement of the meetings. It is said there has not been so much interest before in twenty-five years. To the Lord be all the glory. Some twenty-five rose for prayers last evening, and new ones decided to follow Jesus. Those who attend the meetings can truly say, "It is good to be here." Glorious results come from the inquiry meetings, which follow the preaching every evening. Some very wicked ones have been converted, and are rejoicing in the Lord.

This evening (Dec. 18th), I am to commence a series of lectures in Camden, N. J., on the great chart, in the church where Bro. I. B. Potter has been holding meetings for some weeks. His labors have been blest to the good of the church. Pray for us.

VERY IMPORTANT.

Rev. E. P. Marvin, who of late has said some good things on the advent in the Church Union of Nov. 18th, has the following very important strictures on the wretched custom so common with many clergymen, especially at funerals. He says: (D. D. T.)

"One of the most common and fatal perversions of the Scripture, is that of using it out of its true meaning by way of accommodation. This practice has been common among good men, and yet it is a perversion of God's holy truth. It is a solemn and a fearful thing for a public expounder of God's Word, to explain it in any other way than that in which the Holy Spirit intended, or to accommodate it to his theory for an argument or his convenience for a pulpit motto. He should not bring theories to God's Word for confirmation, and he has no authority to preach a sermon for which the Bible furnishes no legitimate text. The pulpit is constantly furnishing examples of this unauthorized and unblest practice. Men who get their sermons outside of the Bible should keep outside of the pulpit.

This practice of accomodation panders conveniently to the popular prejudice against the personal appearing and reign of Christ. It is assumed that as many things are true of death that will be true of his appearing, we may apply hundreds of passages concerning his appearing, to death, and we may properly read such parables as the Ten Virgins, The Talents and the Pounds, or the fifth chapter of Thessalonians at funerals, and at least allow the popular impression that death is the theme of them.

A fearful account must be rendered up for such careless or wilful wresting of the Scriptures. Death is not appealed to as a motive half a dozen times in the New Testament. His appearing is appealed to three or four hundred times, and if public teachers pervert or accommodate these instructing, consoling, soul-thrilling and alarming appeals, so that they lose their original sense, freshness, beauty and power, much of their works must be burned up, and their own salvation must be as by fire.

O brethren! let us be honest, diligent and prayerful to the last degree, in the interpretation of God's Word!"

THE New York Mercantile Journal has these remarks about the causes of "hard times."

"These are 'hard times.' I'll tell you why. The nation is spending more money for intoxicating drinks than for all the bread and all the clothes it wears, all the books it reads, or all the churches it has ever built. If every one of its accursed saloons could be shut up, and every bottle was smashed forever, we should have good times in thirty days."

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at its rooms, 144 Hanover Street, Boston, on the 5th of September, 1876, it was voted that the Society make diligent effort to raise the sum of TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund. This is one of the most important departments of our field of labor, and the Society intend to make more earnest efforts than ever before to publish the soul-stirring message of Christ's speedy second advent, and the precious truths connected therewith. To this end the Society solicits the aid of its friends and sympathizers, and hopes that donations to this object may be prompt, liberal and hearty.

LETTER FROM BURMAH.

To the Brethren of the same blessed hope:—Premising that the few lines addressed to you through the Crisis were spared from the waste basket of the Editorial of the dear Crisis, I with pleasure sit down to have a few minutes pen and ink conversation with you of the same hope, so far away; and the subject of this is to be my experience of the Burmese as they have come within my observation, and any facts regarding the climate, etc., that may be of interest to you all.

With reference to the people themselves, they are, on the whole, a very hospitable race, and willing to share their humble fare with any, be they Europeans of the far-off West, or their brethren of the plains of India. And they treat all alike, and show no more deference to the former than to the latter; but from what I have seen of the race, they are intensely indolent; and it is proverbial that the majority of them will not go out to a day's work if provision for the day is in the house.

Then again, the woman is the head winner; as a rule, the man is a spendthrift and an atrocious gambler, though generally a kind-hearted, hospitable, lazy fellow, with a good deal of pride and self-assurance about him, and quite free from those cringing propensities of the Hindoo. He is generally pretty truthful, and, as a rule, thoroughly honest. His ideas of the future are of the haziest description, believing the veriest nonsense regarding unseen things; consequently, the priests, called Phoorsee, have very great power over them; in illustration of which I may state that in the investigation of a conspiracy to destroy the Arsenal in Rampoor, it came out in the evidence that the poor dupes were under the impression that the partaking of food that had been blessed by the Hati, who are the angels or something of that kind, their flesh became impervious to the bullet and cuts of the weapons of the Europeans.

Their faith is Buddhism, and the greatest bliss they hope to attain to is absorption into their deity, Buddha. I believe that missionaries get the best of treatment from the whole of the people. They have no caste, and are not prejudiced against Europeans, which cannot be said of the people of India.

The Baptist Mission (American) is doing a good work in Burmah, having quite a large body of followers among the Karens; but the Roman church have the greatest number of adherents, to the shame of all the world of Protestants. And it is only just to say, that the Roman Catholic priest is a far more self-sacrificing individual than his Protestant brother.

Here is a large field, for those who have the means, of sending to the heathen those who are willing to be nothing that souls may be won to Jesus; and I am firmly convinced that were the people given the opportunity of learning the whole truth regarding man and his destiny, and Jesus and his love, many would be brought out of darkness to light.

Is it not possible for believers in the doctrine of life only in Christ, and the personal reign of Jesus, to form some kind of society for the purpose of sending a few missionaries to the heathen?

There is no society that I am aware of, in either India or Burmah, that allows its members to preach that the doctrine of eternal torment is not in the Bible, but Satan's lie.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has some of its members in Burmah, but I am afraid that its influence for good is very limited, as its members are too fond of ritual.

The Mission for the Hatiors is divided between the Baptists and Roman Catholics. There is no other denomination, that I am aware of, that has entered this field, unless the S. P. G. Society have a few laborers in the country, which I hardly think can be numerous. The English speaking population has no Society in Rampoor only the the Church of England, the Free Church of Scotland, the Baptists and the Roman Catholics. Here the Roman Catholics are in the minority; and all through Burmah, which belongs to the English, the above societies, with the exception of the Free Church of Scotland, who are only in Rampoor, have ministers, either as residents or as visitors, to preach and officiate.

I am very sorry to have to say, that there is very little spiritual life amongst the Protestant community in Rampoor; and as for life only in Jesus, and his personal reign, these are tabooed subjects. I am now sixteen years in India, and I don't remember of hearing one sermon in which the apostolic doctrine of a soon returning Jesus was preached; and as for eternal immortality, it is simply taken for granted.

I found the Baptist ministers kind and courteous, but all holding eternal torment views. The Presbyterian minister, L. A. Rue Bain, is an earnest, God-fearing man; and, although he does not profess to hold the doctrine of life only in Christ, yet he does not preach eternal torment; so this is a step in the right direction.

The climate of Burmah is peculiar. It is awfully damp for six months in the year. The houses here are chiefly built of wood, those of brick being covered with funfli, from the extreme moisture; and the binding of books gives way entirely, and everything that is fastened with glue suffers the same fate and stands no chance whatever. Clothes also deteriorate very rapidly, the moths making havoc with all woollen goods unless frequently aired. Added to this is the nuisance of servants, who are fifty per cent dearer than they are in India, and very uppish.

The remaining six months of the year are pretty passable, and for about three months very pleasant. Compared to India, everything is nearly double in value; but if a person is in a good position and has ample means, he can make himself very comfortable and have a tolerable time of it; but should you be in part employ, and get the same pay as in India, you are not to be envied during your residence there.

THE WANT OF PASTORS AND A SUGGESTION.

THOS. FITZSIMMONS.

We are much pleased to see the large number of conversions being weekly made to our faith in the Western and Southern States. The reports from the Conference meetings and the missionaries themselves, are very consoling to us, in these days, when there seems to be a falling away among the old denominations both in zeal and numbers.

This great increase to our faith and belief—the Lord helping us in his signs of the times,—proves to us that he is stirring up those who will be saved, to a knowledge and watchfulness of his coming. There is one great drawback however to this good news of the increase of our membership, and that is, the want of pastors to the newly raised up little congregations. Within the past six months we have seen this want crying and pressing. The preacher comes to a town or station, gathers the people, makes converts, and baptizes, and then is obliged to leave; and the little flock, without any shepherd, soon get again lukewarm and scattered.

Now, from the present condtion of the finances of the Advent societies, they are unable always to remedy this difficulty. And we now have a suggestion to make that we believe will largely remedy the present condition, and provide our brethren with permanent pastors and teachers. It is this: Let every town or station over the country, where there are twenty-five or more Adventists who have not a pastor or resident teacher, hold a meeting, and put in ballot for that office two of their most spiritual and intelligent male members, and let the ones so chosen be formally installed teachers or leaders. By this means, a hundred towns and stations over the United States can be provided with permanent teachers, which are now utterly destitute in this particular.

Brethren, read over again carefully this suggestion, and if it commends itself to your judgment, act upon it.

REPORT OF YORK COUNTY CONFERENCE.

The second annual session of the York Co. A. C. Conference was held at Biddeford, Me., commencing Thursday, Dec. 7th, and holding over the following Sabbath. The preachers present were—J. Gay, Wm. H. Mitchell, Geo. W. Brown, J. Hill, George Sederquest, J. R. Tripp, M. Stevens, A. A. Robinson, A. Stillings, A. Davis, and R. F. Emerson.

The President being unavoidably absent, the meeting was called to order by Bro. M. Stevens. The Brn. and Srs. got to work immediately, and soon the influence of the Holy Spirit, as it wrought upon the hearts of God's dear people, elevated the meeting to such a pitch of enthusiasm that we hardly knew where to stop. Really, we never got done in any one meeting, but only adjourned from one meeting to another. The evening service was a sermon by R. F. Emerson. Subject—The necessity of the incarnation of Christ. This was followed by exhortations of great earnestness and power.

Friday, prayer and social meeting, beginning at nine o'clock A. M. Testimony came pouring in, warm, fervid and powerful, and soon the meeting had attained such spiritual headway that the usual preaching service was dispensed with, and the meeting run till noon. In the afternoon, we were favored with a soul-stirring discourse by Bro. Geo. Sederquest, on "The hope," contrasted with a hope. This service was marked by special interest. Prayer meeting in the evening.

Saturday, business occupied the whole forenoon and part of the afternoon; Bro. Gay in chair. The Secretary being absent, Bro. Brown was chosen Sec. pro tem. Reports of last meeting and of the Secretary and Treasurer were read and accepted. Bro. G. W. Brown was then elected to preside the ensuing year. R. F. Emerson was chosen Sec. for the ensuing year. Bro. J. Gay was chosen Treasurer, and the old financial Board was re-elected. The reports of ministers and delegates were called for and heard; which were of a very hopeful and encouraging character indeed, and all seemed to feel that our Conference is doing a good work, and is a decided success. The churches represented were—Biddeford, Saco, Kennebunk, Hollis Centre, Buxton, Steep Falls, Bonny Eagle, Kezar Falls, So. Hiram, West Parsonsfield, So. Windham, Portland, Springvale, and other places.

Voted, to hold our next quarterly meeting at Kennebunkport, Me., the first Tuesday in March next, at 7 o'clock P. M.

Voted, that the Secretary publish the minutes of the Conference in the Crisis.

Voted, to extend a vote of thanks to the good people and church at Biddeford for the kind and assiduous care and attention shown to us throughout the convention.

Voted, to adjourn. Able and interesting sermons were preached by Brn. Stillings, Stevens, Brown and Emerson during the remainder of the session, at the close of which four arose and signified a desire to be "buried" with Christ in baptism. The church worshiping at Biddeford have recently been strengthened by quite a revival interest, resulting in the addition of some twenty members to the church. And the influence of the holy convocation just closed must be indeed quickening and salutary to the church already blessed of God. And we think it is the verdict of all present, that the meeting was one of the best if not the best one we have enjoyed yet. To God be all the praise. Amen.

R. F. EMERSON, Secretary.

P. S.—A solemn and impressive communion service was observed at the close of the sermon Sabbath afternoon, many participating.

WILL THE TURK REMAIN IN EUROPE?

In "From the Lakes of Killarney to the Golden Horn," published by Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York, Henry M. Field, D. D., who was a witness of some recent events in that region, speaks as follows of the eventual departure of Turkish rule from Europe:

"There is a saying in the East that 'where the Turk comes the grass never grows.' Is it not time that these Tartar hordes, that have so long held dominion in Europe, should return into the deserts from which they came, leaving the grass to spring up from under their departing feet?

But some Christian people and missionaries dread such an issue, because they think that it is a struggle between the Russian and the Turk, and that if the Turk goes out the Russian must come in.

This, I believe, will come; but it will not come without a struggle. The Turks are not going to depart out of Europe at the first invitation of Russia, or of all Europe combined. They have shown that they are a formidable foe. When this war began, some who had been looking and longing for the destruction of Turkey thought this was the beginning of the end; enthusiastic students of prophecy saw in it 'the drying up of the Euphrates.' All these had better moderate their expectations. Admitting that the final end will be the overthrow of the Mohammedan power in Europe, yet this end may be many years in coming. 'The sick man' is not dead, and he will not die quietly and peacefully, as an old man breathes his last. He will not gather up his feet into his bed, and turn his face to the wall, and give up the ghost. He will die on the field of battle and his death-struggles will be tremendous. The Turk came into Europe on horseback, waving his scimitar over his head, and he will not depart like a fugitive, 'as men flee away in battle,' but will make his last stand on the shores of the Bosphorus and fall fighting to the last. I commend this sober view to those whose minds may be inflamed by reading of the atrocities of the present war, and who may anticipate the march of events. The end will come; but we cannot dictate, or even know the time of its coming.

That end I firmly believe will be the exodus of the Turks from Europe. Not that the people as a body will depart. There is not likely to be another national migration. The expulsion of a hundred thousand of the conquering race of the Osmanlis—or of half that number—may suffice to remove that imperious element that has so long kept the rule in Turkey, and by its command of a warlike people, been for centuries the terror of Europe. But the Turkish power—the power to oppress and to persecute, to kill and destroy, to perpetrate such massacres as now thrill the world with horror—must and will come to an end.

In expressing this confident opinion, I do not lay claim to any political wisdom or sagacity. Nor do I attach importance to my personal observations. But I do give weight to the judgment of those who have lived in Turkey for years and who know well the Government and the people; and in what I say I only reflect the opinion of the whole foreign community in Constantinople. While there I questioned everybody; I sought information from the best informed and wisdom from the wisest; and I heard but one opinion. Not a man expressed the slightest hope of Turkey, or the slightest confidence in its professions of reform. One and all, Englishmen and Americans, Frenchmen and Germans, Spaniards and Italians, agreed that it was past saving, that it was 'appointed to die,' and that its removal from the map of Europe was only a question of time."

THESSALONIANS 2: 2.

B. M. COLE.

There is enough in this chapter to show us just where we are in the world's history. After Paul had exhorted the Thessalonians not to be soon shaken in mind as though the day of Christ is at hand, but said, "That day shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Now, when the Ecumenical Council at Rome voted on the Pope's infallibility, had it been unanimous, they would have shown him to be infallible; but they did not so vote; consequently, he showed himself that he is God by saying, "It is above your prerogatives. I can assume it by virtue of my position and office." How minutely corresponding with the Word. The eighth verse says, "And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." He seems to me to be the only personification of this prophecy.

FLESHLY ISRAEL.

If fleshly Israel never will return to their own land, what do the following passages mean? Amos 9: 14; Isa. 43: 5; Joel 3: 2; Jer. 33: 3. JOHN MILLER.

It is very certain that fleshly Israel never will return to their own land, for they have forfeited all right and title to it. The idea that Christ will gather all the literal descendants of Abraham into the land of Palestine, after he comes to judge the world, with the purpose of giving that backslidden and rebellious people another probation, is so contrary to the whole genius of the gospel, that we wonder how any intelligent reader of the Bible can possibly entertain it. God is not such a "respecter of persons" that he is going to give the Jews two chances and the Gentiles only one. The promises referred to above were made to Israel either before or during their captivity in Babylon, as any one can see by spending five minutes to examine. If those promises insure the deliverance of Israel from that sad captivity which hung over them for seventy years, they do not include a second probation for that highly favored but ungrateful people, after the resurrection morning. Less Judaism and more Christianity would be a great improvement.—Sel. by H. Munger.

A REQUEST.—Dear Bro. Couch:—I have a cancer that is troubling me. I believe the prayer of faith will heal the sick. Will you ask all the dear children, through the Crisis, to pray for me, that my health may be restored?

Correspondence.

From Bro. and Sr. Thorp.

Dear Bro. Couch:—As it has been some considerable time since we wrote anything for the Crisis, we thought fit to pen a few lines this evening, to say how much we love and prize it. Truly, it seems to us that we could hardly do without its weekly visits. We love to read the letters from the dear ones scattered abroad. It is comforting to know that there are a few whose eyes are open to see the situation of the church and of the world, and who realize that we are nearing home. Home! How sweet the word! What pleasant anticipations we indulge of a home in the beautiful land of Eden. No more death, no more pain, no more sorrow. Cares, tears, toils and woe banished forever. Pleasant thought! Blessed hope! Dearer to us than friends; dearer to us than life.

Praise the Lord! We know that the consummation of this blessed hope is near at hand. The last wail of anguish, the last cry of pain, the last groan of agonized humanity, will soon be hushed in the stillness of eternal peace.

We feel that we have given all to Jesus, and that he is our all-sufficient friend. The past year has been one of varied experience to us, and we trust that we have not lived in vain. We have spent part of the time at home, and part of the time away, always working with our own hands to supply our needs, and preaching the Word, according to our ability, as opportunity offered. We feel grateful to our Father for his goodness to us. "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." O! how earnest and devoted the children of God should be now, while the devil is busy seducing people and drawing them away from the truth. "Behold, what manner of persons we ought to be, in all holy conversation and godliness"; ready to do or speak for Jesus. We cannot tell how much good we may do by a right example and a ready witness for Jesus. Then let us not hide our light under a bushel, but let it shine, and publish the tidings abroad.

We have received and accepted a call from the church of Christ at Salem, Jewell county, Kansas, to labor with them the ensuing year. We part with many dear friends in the church at this place, but we go cheerfully, knowing that the Lord has called us, and that wherever we may go we cannot go beyond the care of our loving Father in heaven, and that he will cause all things to work together for our good. We thank our good friends for the Crisis, and we also thank God. If it seems good to our brethren of the Crisis Office to continue it, please change the address to J. S. Thorp, White Mound, Jewell Co., Kan., instead of Delta, Jewell Co.

In bringing this letter to a close, we can hardly forbear to express our thanks for the timely editorials on the "Eastern question." God bless the Crisis.

From Sr. Susan E. Teeple.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith: How little some of you know of the many deprivations that the isolated saints of God have to endure. Afflictions seem to be the lot of many of them. But the greatest trial, with some of them, is to be deprived of the many means of grace which others can enjoy. I know we have an everywhere present God to go to, I know our blessings are innumerable, and Jesus can in all places give answer to prayer. But as iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the countenance of a man his friend. But it is blessed to meet in prayer and conference meetings, as one gets strength and encouragement to press onward, to endure hardness, to bear trials, to overcome temptation. O praise God. He loveth me, even me, and I know I have passed from death unto life because I love the brethren. And this life is in Jesus, and I expect to live eternally in God's everlasting kingdom. His kingdom is nearing, the omens are so bright my soul rejoiceth.

It was my privilege to meet with the saints of God at the Plainville Campmeeting, but have not been to any meeting since, nor seen one of like precious faith, till a few days ago, an aged pilgrim (Bro. Treat) came here; and it seemed good to behold his countenance, and grasp his friendly hand.

All things work together for good to them that love God. Yes, this is God's promise, and it has been precious to me a great many times. I took up the Crisis and found a little gem of three lines, "We may not be able to see how all things work together for our good, God does not require us to see it, but to believe it." O blessed, blessed! This was a sweet little gem, worth the whole paper to me. I think now I will never forget it, "not required of us to see it, but to believe it." Well, I will believe all things work together for good to them that love God. What are all our trials, all our disappointments, all our deprivations, all our sufferings? Truly they are nothing compared with this great salvation.

Then, dear saints of God, go on; meet often, you that can, but do not forget those that are isolated, and are deprived of such privilege. Soon the time will come when all the dear saints, from every clime and nation, will meet to sing the song of the redeemed. Will the writer be among them? How many that read these lines will meet me there? When I read none but the pure in heart shall see God, I feel it a great thing to be ready for the great day that is approaching; but I am striving, and watching, and waiting, and praying, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Hotchkissville, Ct., Dec. 13th, 1876.

From Bro. L. Allen.

Dear Brn. of the Crisis:—I want to say, for the encouragement of any who may be interested in the work of the Lord in Chicopee, that it is still going on with increased interest. Last week the Baptist brethren offered us their house four evenings free, which was well filled; the last evening there were twenty-three came forward for prayers. Yesterday, which was Sunday, the meeting was to have been in the Town Hall, but on account of the severity of the weather we thought best to return to the hall where the most of our meetings have been held; but it would not hold all, and many had to go away.

Seventeen more were baptized, among them one Catholic. We understood there was another one that would have been, but she was locked up. In the evening twenty-four came forward for prayers, among them an infidel, all melted down, and the Lord blessed him. They seem to be converted to the Bible, and are looking for eternal life when Jesus comes to set up his kingdom. Blessed be God forever.

Chicopee Falls, Dec. 11th, 1876.

From Bro. Gilman Clark.

Bro. Conch:—I would like to state, for the encouragement of all the readers of our paper, the Crisis, what the Lord is doing up here.

Eld. Glidden has been holding meetings here for quite a number of evenings and one Sabbath, and the Lord is blessing his labors. Some twenty-five or thirty have started to serve the Lord. Some have come out bright, others are coming along. Wanderers are coming home, sinners asking the prayers of God's people. I believe it is the last call of mercy. The muttering thunders in the east tell us that Jesus is coming soon. Over yon horizon shines the morn of the coming day.

Let me say to all who are looking for this blessed hope, Be strong, fear not, your God will come and save you. Your brother, looking for Jesus soon.

Tamworth, Dec. 12th, 1876.

THE CONFERENCE AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

The representatives of the great Powers of Europe have concluded their preliminary conference at Constantinople; and the result of their deliberations has been referred to their respective Governments for definite instructions. The formal conference will probably follow as soon as responses are received to the propositions forwarded to the several Governments. All accounts agree that the preliminary meetings of the conference have been characterized by harmony and good feeling, that mutual concessions have been made, and that a basis of agreement has been settled on. Precisely what the terms of this agreement are, is, of course, a matter of surmise; but the indications are that it includes a cessation of the war between Turkey and her provinces, a surrender of prisoners on both sides, the cession of some slices of territory to Servia and Montenegro, the inauguration of needed reforms in the Turkish Government of Christian subjects, disarmament in Bulgaria and the military occupation of Bulgarian territory by some mutual Power, to insure the execution of the reforms demanded.

The question of agreement in the conference being out of the way, the alternative of peace or war in the East now depends on the question: "Will Turkey accept these propositions, and give the needed guarantees?" We have already, from several quarters, a positive assurance that Turkey will not consent to cede any territory to Servia or Montenegro, and that she will reject all propositions looking to the disarmament of the Mahometans, foreign occupation or the control of the Adminstration by an International Commission. Her position in Europe has not been a proud one; she is accustomed to external interference and contemptuous treatment; and the present is not the first time that she has had her policy dictated to her and its adoption compelled by force. She cannot afford to be proud, and, although her people are stirred now by the spirit of patriotism, intensified by religious animosities and a bitter antagonism to Russia, it is at least an open question whether she will not yield to the extraordinary pressure brought to bear upon her and make the concessions which the Powers may agree in demanding.

If not, the alternative is plain. The immense military preparations of Russia will culminate in an immediate attempt to compel acquiescence by force. The Russian and Turkish armies will come into instant collision, and there will be a sharp and bloody struggle between the two Powers. If Turkey makes up her mind to resist now, she will do so with the full intention of risking every thing upon the result. It will be a contest for life or death, and she will not yield until she is crushed or almost annihilated. The conference, in this case, will have accomplished this result: by presenting a programme agreed upon by all the Powers, it will give Russia the moral force of being commissioned to enforce the will of Europe; it will tie the hands of the other Powers, and compel them to keep out of the contest, except in some new emergency; and it will place Turkey in an attitude of resistance, not to Russia merely, but to all the other great Powers. These points will tell greatly in favor of Russia, and have doubtless been eagerly desired by Russian diplomatists.—Boston Journal.

HOW TO BECOME WISE AND USEFUL.

The word of the Lord is an inexhaustible mine, which though we may never in time fully explore, yet we may penetrate deeper and deeper daily, and bring up new truths; and by having these newly discovered truths experimentally tested we shall have new and varied experiences. You "want to be something more than a mere professor;" and by pursuing the course which I suggest you will become another sort of a professor than the ordinary race of professing christians. You will become a wise, useful follower of the Savior, for you will be ever receiving out of the Lord's treasury things new and old, and as you receive them your heart will be yearning over others, and you will solicitously watch for opportunities to dispense to others as God dispenses to you.

SEEKING TRUTH FOR THE LOVE OF IT.

The great error of the world in all ages has been that the Holy Scriptures have not been properly regarded. People have taken the opinions of men, and have founded their faith and practice on this basis, instead of making the Word of God the only foundation. Thus with the ancient Jews, their faith was based and their practice regulated by the views of their prophets, who prophecied unto them smooth things. Instead of bringing these opinions to the law and the testimony, in order to test their truthfulness, they were disposed to shun the presence of those who would have directed their attention thus. So generally were the prophets at one time in the history of Israel disposed to say pleasant, rather than truthful things, that the king knew of but one left, and said he, "I hate him, for he never prophesieth good unto me, but always evil." So inclined is short-sighted man to seek opiates for conscience, rather than to seek truth for the love of it.

Professions of godliness are popular with such as will not interfere with conformity to the spirit of the world—which will not press an identification with truths which are disreputable and leave its partisan free to mingle with the mass. It is now generally conceded that a profession of this sort adds weight to character. An individual may make a show as a professor, and Jehu-like attract much attention by his zeal, and if he will only let disreputable truth alone, and not search the Scriptures to know the mind of the Lord in order that he may deliver it faithfully to the people, he may still remain popular.

Let one do as Micaiah did, that is, instead of inquiring to know how he may be most popular, inquire of God how he may be most faithful to the souls of the people, by bringing out those truths at which the carnal mind revolts, but which people and pastor must soon meet at the bar of God—let one do this, and at heart the voice of many a professor will be, "I hate him, for he never prophesieth good unto me, but always evil." Let us take courage. "Marvel not, my friend, if the world hate you." It hated the Savior before it hated you; but O be careful under all circumstances that you exhibit your Savior's loving spirit.—Guide to Holiness.

BURNS—STAPLES. In Oxford, Me., Nov. 29th, 1876, by Elder G. L. Tracy, Mr. CHARLES BURNS, of Poland, Me., and Miss LIZZIE M. STAPLES, of Oxford.

Obituaries.

PAINE. In Massena, N. Y., Sept. 30th, 1876, Joseph Paine, aged seventy-eight years.

Our beloved Bro. was among the first who settled in this country while it was yet wild, and with but few inhabitants. He has passed through many a cold winter, but he sleeps in Jesus now, down beneath the snow and wind which is whirling about our dwelling while we write.

In the year 1844 he put on Christ by baptism, and has ever continued steadfast in the faith of the near coming of Christ. During the past summer, until a few weeks before his death, he would ride eight miles to hear us preach the gospel of the kingdom. He remarked to us that he would like to stay till Jesus returned, but if he could glorify God more by sleeping a little while, his will be done. He said, "I expect to sleep, but I shall come up in the resurrection."

He leaves a large circle of relatives to mourn, among whom are brothers and sisters, children, and an aged companion, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Words of comfort were spoken to a large and sympathizing group of friends by the writer, from Job 14: 14. C. PIKE.

GAINES. In East Hartland, Conn., Nov. 19th, 1876, Mabel Gaines, wife of Lester K. Gaines, aged fifty-six years.

Our Sister was an earnest christian. Her funeral was attended at the Congregationalist church, and a large congregation met to sympathize with our Bro. in his affliction. The sorrow was general at parting with one who had gained the affections of many while she endeavored to walk with the Lord for many years.

The writer spoke from Rev. 14: 13, showing our Sister's faith to be scriptural, asleep in death only to be awakened at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. May the God of all grace comfort our weeping Bro. There are three sons and one daughter who can counsel with mother no more. We pray that they may ever seek that God who will guide them by a counsel divine. And when mother, so dear, shall wake to life eternal, may they meet her on the evergreen shore. S. WOODRUFF.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Dec. 18. A terrible colliery explosion occurred to-day in the South Wales Company's pit, near Newport. Seventeen bodies were recovered, and many miners taken out alive are seriously and some fatally injured.

Dec. 22. Many wrecks on the coast of Aberdeenshire and Kinairdinesshire are reported to-day, in consequence of the gale, and upward of sixty lives lost. In addition to these disasters the Italian barque Maria Gardella, in the American trade, has been totally lost off Stabbshead, and twelve persons drowned. These, with other casualties reported during the last few days, make the total number of lives lost on the east coast of Scotland and England during the recent gale fully one hundred and fifty.

The Times' dispatch from Shields says that the shores of the Tyne are strewn for three or four miles with wrecks. Similar accounts come from all along the east coast.

A Vienna dispatch to the Daily News says that the prolongation of the armistice until March, '77, is now certain. Turkey objected to a shorter term. Russia did not oppose her because she has only 120 000 men concentrated on the frontier, being 40,000 below the intended number. The deficiency is owing to the unexpected difficulties of transportation.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Pottsville, Pa , Dec. 22. The bodies of four miners, terribly disfigured and burned, were found in the pit of the Ashland Colliery to-day, into which they yesterday carried four kegs of powder for blasting purposes.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

Notices.

VERMONTERS, READ.—More labor is demanded in the mission fields in this State than we have funds to pay the expenses of. There are back pledges unpaid, some of which have been standing some time. These should be paid, as they are much needed. Send on at once, and save us the expense of visiting you personally to collect these pledges. There are flattering fields opening for building up churches, and we hope the brethren of this State will not let the work drag heavily for want of funds. Let the laity sacrifice with the preachers and the work will prosper. Send to me at Morrisville, Vt., or to J. T. Edson, East Roxbury, Vt. A. A. HOYT, 1st Elder.

NOTICE.—An adjourned session of the Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec will convene at Magog, P. Q., Thursday, at 10½ A. M., Jan. 4th, 1877, for the transaction of the following business: 1. To adopt an amended form of its Constitution, as voted at the last session, and published in the Crisis of Oct. 14th, 1876. 2. To elect a full board of officers. 3. To take a deed of the Lake View camp-ground, as already arranged. 4. To appoint a Campmeeting Committee. 5. To elect a delegate, or delegates, for the next August Convention of the A. C. Association, to be held in Chelsea, Mass. 6. Miscellaneous business. We hope for a full attendance of all interested, all members of the Conference especially; and all others who can unite upon the basis proposed.

Dear brethren, united we stand, divided we fall. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer. Northern Vermont and New Hampshire can unite with us if they think best. C. P. DOW. E. C. ORCUTT.

NOTICE.—There will be a Conference at East Washburn, Me., commencing Friday, Dec. 29th, and continuing over the Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all, both ministers and people, to come and labor for the upbuilding of the church of Christ and the salvation of sinners. E. I. CROUSE, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held in Richmond (Reed meeting-house) evening, Dec. 28th. The preaching brethren belonging to Conference are especially requested to attend. Let all come filled with the Spirit, and labor for salvation. Will Brn. Baker and Hall come? H. D. REED.

Dedication.

The A. C. Church just completed at Sparta, Morrow Co., Ohio, will be dedicated to the worship of God on Sunday, Dec. 31st, at 10.30 A. M. Bro. Grant will be present with the great Map of History, and continue meetings as the Lord may direct. Bro. Burr and others are also expected to be present and assist in the services. Let there be a general rally to this meeting. The church extend a hearty invitation to all to come. In behalf of the church, E. M'CULLOCH, Pastor.

P. S. Those coming from the North will take the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. to Fredericktown, arriving at midday. Be sure and write John Blinn, Sparta, Morrow Co., Ohio, at least five days previous, what time to meet them, and how many are coming. Those coming over the Cleveland and Columbus R. R. will be met at Cardington by writing to Bro. Blinn as above. E. M.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—By order of Directors the first Quarterly Meeting of the Lay Association of Advent believers of Iowa will be held at New Hartford, commencing on the evening of the 18th of January, 1877, and holding over Lord's day. Judging from the numerous responses received from brethren in Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska since the Convention, we think we have taken a step in the right direction, and we look for a glorious meeting. We extend a cordial invitation to all God's faithful and patient ministers. Come with your flowing bowls and let the famishing souls be filled. Come, ye isolated ones; come all that love the Lord. Bring in all the tithes and offerings, and try the Lord, and see if we do not receive the blessing. B. BANTON, Sec.

NOTICE.—The California Advent Christian Conference will hold its next meeting in Santa Clara, Thursday, Jan. 18th, 1877, in the new Chapel. The Chapel will be dedicated at two o'clock P. M. A good attendance is desired. Provisions made for all who come to work in harmony for the upbuilding of the cause of Jesus. A. J. YOUNG, Secretary.

NOTICE.—There will be a week's meeting at Friendship, Me., commencing Sunday, Dec. 31st, and holding over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited. Bro. H. L. Hastings is expected to preach the Word of life. For the Brn., JOHN R. HALL.

NOTICE.—If the Lord will, a Protracted Meeting will be held at Abington, Conn., Wednesday, Dec. 27th, at two o'clock P. M., and continue over the Lord's day. We expect to take some action at this meeting that will unite more closely the churches of East Connecticut in the work of God. Let all churches interested be present, ready to act for Christ. Pray for the meeting. H. DAVIS.

NOTICE.—The next session of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York will be held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, Jan. 26th, 1877, and holding over the following Sunday. Come one and all. Let us have a spiritual meeting. A. H. BRIGGS, President.

NOTICE.—The first Quarterly Meeting of the A. C. Church, known as the Lawrence and Leavenworth Conference, will convene with the church at Reno, Leavenworth Co., Kansas, Friday evening, Jan. 19th, 1877, to hold over Lord's day. All are invited to attend. A. C. SILER, Sec.

NOTICE.—There will be a Protracted Meeting of the A. C. Church, held with the Salt Creek Church, at the Little school-house in Republic Co., Kansas, commencing Dec. 28th, and holding over two Sundays. The North Western Quarterly Conference of Kansas will meet some time during the meeting at the call of the President. Eld. J. C. Smith, the State Evangelist, is expected to be present. Everybody is cordially invited to attend, and all ministering brethren are requested to be present to help preach the Word.

THOS. R. COMSTOCK, Sec. of the N. W. Quar. Conf. of Kansas.

NOTICE.—I would say to those churches who have requested me to preach for them, that I am now at liberty to do so, as the Lord may open the way. Address me at 61 Bellevue Avenue, Providence, R. I. A. W. SIBLEY.

NOTICE.—There will be a Watch Meeting held by the Advent Church in Bristol, Ct. Brethren and sisters in the adjoining towns are cordially invited to join with us. Accommodations will be provided for any who wish to stay all night. WM. REYNOLDS, Sec.

"TRUTH AND ERROR CONTRASTED."

Being a Review of a Series of Sermons delivered by Eld. R. Newton, D. D., near Stevenson, Ala., against the views of the people known as Advent Christians.

By ELDER J. A. CARGILE.

We have just published a neat edition of the above in pamphlet form, adding to the Review "Man in Death," by Edmund Law, D. D., late Lord Bishop of Carlisle, Eng., a very valuable work written one hundred years ago.

Also Extracts from fifty eminent writers, ancient and modern, who teach that immortality is a gift through Christ. This is a grand work to circulate everywhere.

For sale by J. A. Cargile, Stevenson, Ala., or I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me. Price 10 cents postpaid. Sold also at the World's Crisis Office.

TWO NEW TRACTS.

We have just published two new Tracts.

"THE DIVINE ARTILLERY."

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

This is a valuable tract, addressed to theologians and thinkers, critics, Bible students and ministers, concerning what the Lord has furnished to be preached to sinners as motives and inducements to repentance, and to saints to induce activity and endurance. The Bible hope is clearly and forcibly stated. Price 50 cts. per one hundred, or 15 cts. per dozen by mail.

"THE FEARFUL OUTLOOK."

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

This attempts to show those who are anxious, perplexed and fearful about what is coming on the earth, that the wars and preparations of the last thirty years, the present distress of nations, and struggle with Popery and Turkey, will result in our Lord's return and the destruction of the nations. This will be read by all. Second edition enlarged. Price $1.50 per hundred, or 30 cts. per dozen, by mail.

Address I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

For sale as above at the Crisis Office.

Appointments.

APPOINTMENTS MUST BE RECEIVED AS EARLY AS TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

The following RESOLUTION was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"RESOLVED, That no appointments be published in the CRISIS henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given.

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"RESOLVED, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons, by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers, lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received, as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass.

A NEW BOOK.

"LIFE IN CHRIST:

A STUDY OF THE SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE ON THE NATURE OF MAN; THE OBJECT OF THE DIVINE INCARNATION, AND THE CONDITIONS OF HUMAN IMMORTALITY.

BY EDWARD WHITE,

Author of the "Mystery of Growth," etc.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK, 62 PATERNOSTER ROW,

1875."

The above is the title of a book of 590 pages octavo—perhaps the most comprehensive and exhaustive statement of the arguments in favor of the non-eternity of future suffering yet published.

As many as can, should possess themselves of this work. Just received from the London publisher, and for sale at this Office. Price $4.00. Sent by mail on reception of the same. AG'T.

A LIST OF NEW BOOKS,

JUST RECEIVED FROM

KELLAWAY & CO.'S ENGLISH REPOSITORY.

FOR SALE AT THE OFFICE OF

"THE ADV. CHRIS. PUB. SOCIETY," 144 HANOVER STREET.

Persons purchasing from the following list, help in so doing to sustain the English Repository.

BIBLICAL PSYCHOLOGY. Written by an English Lawyer now deceased. An almost incomparable book on the nature of Man and his state in death. Our Preachers should secure it. Only a small remnant left. Published at $5.25; reduced to $2.50; postage 16c.

EARNEST WORDS FOR HONEST SKEPTICS. By the author of "Bible Triumphant." If possible, it even excels that work. Very interesting. 75 cts.; postage 5c.

DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT. Fifth edition. By Rev. H. Constable, M. A., late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. A standard book. $1; postage 8c.

HADES, OR THE INTERMEDIATE STATE OF MAN. Second edition. 367 pages. Also a standard work. It contains vastly more than the first edition. $1.25; postage 7c.

RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS—the "all things spoken of by the Prophets who have been since the world began." Not restoration of the wicked. A capital book to read, or give away. A good supply is on hand for this purpose. 16 cts; postage 2c.

DISCUSSION ON THE STATE OF MAN IN DEATH. An interesting debate, with double propositions, and affirmations as well as negatives on both sides Held between Bro. W. Kellaway and a Congregational minister. Useful to scatter. Good supply. Cloth 50 cts., postage 5c; paper cover 30 cts., postage 3c.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT; being a Reply to an Infidel Work entitled "144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible." Has sold long, is well known, and still much called for. Needs no recommendation. Cloth 70 cts., postage 4c; paper cover 50 cts., postage 3c.

REPORT OF LARGE CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY MEETING held in London May 15th, 1876. Only a few copies. 25 cts; postage 2c.

HELL ACCORDING TO SCRIPTURE. By S. F. Pells. With Notes by W. Kellaway. For thoughtful readers. A good supply. 10 cts; postage 1c.

HOPE OF LIFE ETERNAL. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts; postage 2c.

CATHOLIC APOSTOLIC CHURCH (Irvingism): Its Pretensions and Claims considered in connection with the facts of its history, and the teaching of the New Testament and early Christian Antiquity. Cloth limp, 65 cts.

REASONS why all Christians should read God's written Word in Greek. 25 cts.

SPUR AND ENCOURAGEMENT to the Study of the Greek of the New Testament. 18 cts.

CHRISTIANITY, and its Relation to Judaism. By G. Greenwell, Ph. D. 25 cts.

Tracts.

We have for some time been unable to supply orders for some of the following Tracts, which are so well suited for plentiful distribution; but have now a large quantity on hand. It will be seen too that there are many new ones in the list.

A VERY OLD SERMON, preached in England fifteen hundred years ago. It teaches that we go to Christ "after our resurrection." Old style of spelling. Three copies, postpaid, 10 cts.

THE NEW JERUSALEM: Poetry, a Criticism, and Scripture. By W. Kellaway. Envelope size. Enamelled wrapper. Six for 25 cts.

"THY KINGDOM COME!" or, the Kingdom of God not yet established on the Earth. By W. Kellaway. Same style as the foregoing. Six for 25 cts.

THE DEEP IMPORTANCE OF THE RE-STANDING from the Dead. By R. Ashcroft, Congregational Minister, England. Six copies for 40 cts.

CHAOS, KOSMOS, THE KINGDOM OF DARKNESS and the Kingdom of God. By E. White, M. A. Our Earth's history from beginning to end. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

WHO ART THOU THAT JUDGEST? A Letter addressed to one, but applicable to many. By Joseph Stratford, Minister of the Gospel. A Rebuke with Doctrine of such as are cruel in their treatment of Christians holding life in Jesus. 5 cts.; postage per dozen 3c.

SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 50 cts.

LIFE EVERLASTING. By W. Leask, D. D. 12 copies for 25 cts.

DIALOGUE between a Predestinarian and his Friend. A lot of valuable extracts. 12 copies for 25 cts.

LIFE AND DEATH. Extract from Archbishop Whateley's "Future Life." 20 copies for 25 cts.

IMMORTALITY. Extracts from numerous authors on Life and Immortality by the Lord Christ. By H. Constable, M. A. Enlarged by Bro. W. Kellaway. 20 copies for 25 cts.

IMMORTALITY ONLY IN CHRIST. A concise presentation of the truth stated in its title, in twenty-three paragraphs and extracts from Fathers. 20 copies for 25 cts.

THE UNDESIRABLENESS OF DEATH. By D. T. Taylor. With "Death and Immortality," by W. Kellaway. 20 copies for 25 cts.

The four Tracts immediately preceding are very valuable, and we have some thousands in hand to meet demands.

SAINTS DO NOT GO TO HEAVEN AT DEATH. By W. Kellaway. Twelve copies for 50 cts.

THE LOVE OF GOD VINDICATED. Six copies for 20 cts.

IS MAN IMMORTAL? 12 copies for 25 cts.

MAN IN DEATH. Texts Revised. Twenty copies for 10 cts.

PERVERSIONS AND DENIALS OF SCRIPTURE. (How so-called Orthodoxy perverts and denies the Scripture upon Immortality.) 20 for 10 cts.

THE QUESTION OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT. By C. Underhill, Oxford. 8 cts., postage 1c.

Remnants and Samples.

One copy each of the following: Spiritual Presence not better than Bodily, 25c; Truth and Tradition, 30c; Oxford Theology, or Romanism in the Church of England, 60c; Anglo-Israel Post Bay, $1.10; Bass' Greek Lexicon to the New Testament, 85c; Hobbs' Everlasting Punishment, paper cover, 45c—limp cloth, 65c—stiff cloth, boards, 90 cts; Hobson's Sermons on Everlasting Punishment, 85c; Science's Quarrel with the Bible, 30c; Links in the Chain of Evidence connecting Israel and England, $1.00; Warleigh's Lectures (with the Discussion following) on Immortality only in Christ, 25c. Add 8 cts. on each dollar's worth of books for postage.

Two each of The Life of Jesus, a Reply to Renan, at 25 cts., and Heathen Doctrines at 3 cts; Six Last Days of Irvingism, 16 cents each. Postage as above.

At Reduced Prices.

Having a considerable number of Bible Echo volumes, and monthly parts on hand, also of Signs of the Times, we desire the co-operation of our readers to distribute them where they will be doing good; and to induce them so to do, we offer them at the following very reduced rates—in many instances at less than half price. They are good reading.

BIBLE ECHO parts, old series. Have been selling at 25 cts, reduced to 10 cts, and 2 cts. postage.

BIBLE ECHO, July monthly part, sample number of present issue. Reduced to 10 cts., 2 cts. postage.

BIBLE ECHO, Vol. I., reduced to $2.75. Vol. 2 to $1.75. Vol. 3 to $1.25. A neat looking volume as well as entertaining reading matter.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Back parts of Monthly Magazine, edited by Rev. M. Baxter. Reduced to 5 cts. per number.

Also the following books and photographs:

HOMES OF OLD ENGLISH WRITERS. A handsome book; a pretty present. Reduced to 85 cts., and 5 cts. postage.

NEW FACTS UPON ALL SUBJECTS. Useful to persons of all trades and professions; also to housewives. Reduced to 60 cts; postage 5 cts. It is hoped that this reduction will secure a clearance of these two standard works of general literature.

PHOTOGRAPH OF S. MINTON, M. A., an able English writer and advocate of the truth of Immortality only in Christ. Reduced to 15 cts.

PHOTOGRAPH OF H. CONSTABLE, M. A., also a talented work on the same vital theme, well known and generally approved by the Advent body. Reduced to 15 cts.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL.

An answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a book of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It is having a wide circulation. We have just received a quantity of the pamphlet edition, and can now fill orders at the following prices: Pamphlet, 25 cts. per copy; $2.25 per dozen by mail; $15.00 per hundred by express. Bound in cloth, 30 cts. per copy by mail; $3.00 per dozen by express. AG'T.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

"LIFT UP THE LATCH AND ENTER IN."

'Twas dark, and I with inward fear
Stood like a culprit weeping near
The house in which my Savior dwelt;
Such pangs my heart had never felt.
A voice addressed me from within—
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

I thought I was unfit to be
A guest of such an one as He;
I needed garments new and fair,
Before I dared to enter there;
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

But in my deepest heart I knew
That I had sinned and basely too;
I trifled with his blood and tears,
I slighted him for months and years.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

But I would rather not comply
Until myself to mend I try;
I need a better heart before
I could be welcome at the door.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

"Not now," I said, "'twill do again
When I am free from all my pain;
No sighing ones are waiting there,
Where songs of gladness fill the air.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

With all my sin and guilt oppressed,
With heart of stone within my breast,
Say! would your Savior honored be
With such a worthless guest as me?
Yes, said the voice that spake within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

WM. KELLAWAY.

TIME BRINGS CHANGES.

The adage that I place this week as one of the sub-headings of my letter is a well-known truism. Time does indeed bring changes; sometimes for the better, but alas! it is not always so. The mutations of changing creatures are often cause of pain to other beings, their associates of by-gone days, with whom perhaps their fellowship was so intimate, that by a happy expression they may be said to have been but as a single soul.

Most of the readers of the Crisis will have heard of the Rev. H. H. Dobney, who wrote about thirty years ago on the truth of possible immortality; probably many of them will have read his book. At least, the older brethren of the van, who have long waged a good warfare, will know of his existence. That time, the Word of God dwelt in him, and he was satisfied with its holy utterances. Looking into the future, he saw light in God's light. Then, he kept what the Bible revealed with respect to destiny. But we live in a restless age. Ever new things arise to work unrest in the mind. Happy they who, when they come to a knowledge of the truth, become established in the same; only going on in the direction of increasing strength, gaining knowledge in the same line, and becoming more deeply persuaded as to the divine authorship of their belief.

The peculiar temptation of the age is to indulge in vague wishes, in indefinite and larger hopes than the Bible warrants. Mr. Dobney has at last gone in that direction. He thinks even for Judas there may be good in store. "Texts" he will not now be limited by; his "heart" leads him beyond them. In foolish generosity he thinks to be more generous than God as revealed in the Scriptures. Ah! that "heart" of man; would that it were known that it is "deceitful" as a guide! The old Protestant confession, that "The written Word of God is the sole rule of christian faith," as well as "godly practice," ought to be frequently remembered and pondered on. And no one may speak except "as the oracles of God." To "go beyond the word of the Lord,"—to nullify penalty with "promises of good," or even intimations that there may be good,—oh! what a sad, sad work. Mr. Edward White, in a letter to the Christian World, grieves over the departure of Mr. Dobney from his old position; and many readers of the Crisis will share in his grief. Brethren, pray for him; for he errs of a kindly disposition. It may be that our gracious God may grant him a returning to "the old path," even "the good way." Mr. Dobney says himself, if ever he changes it is God that must "disillusionize" him.

ADDITIONAL TESTIMONY THAT SPIRITUALISM IS INDUCIVE OF MADNESS.

In a former letter, I wrote that it was being said in England that Spiritualism was a fruitful source of maniacy in the United States. From facts which have been published since, it is confirmed that this newly-revived "ism" is really of a dementing nature. Twelve years ago Mr. Hibbert Newton, vicar of St. Michael's, Southwark, London, wrote a long letter on "Spiritism," which he concluded thus: "God has marked his sense of the sin by giving up thousands to what may almost be looked upon as a kind of demoniacal possession. They have gone to the mad-house. In Zurich alone, thirty-two of the 'consulters of the dead' were sent to the lunatic asylum (See Dibdin's lecture on table turning)." These words are transcribed from this old letter as re-published in the Rock. Dr. Forbes Winslow's letter, in which the United States is mentioned, is as follows:

"The consideration of Spiritualism having been brought before the public, I wish to testify to the pernicious effects on the mind by a belief in its groundless doctrines. It is a startling fact that over ten thousand persons of unsound mind are confined in the lunatic asylums of the United States, driven mad by over excitement caused by Spiritualism. Many of the auditors of the so-called media consist chiefly of weak-minded hysterical persons, who would believe anything they are told. Hearing imaginary voices, the so-called 'auricular delirium, so common in monomania, is one of their prominent symptoms. Insanity from this cause is now very prevalent in England, and is increasing day by day; persons in whom the delusion in spiritual-belief has for a time been dormant are now becoming the victims of an exaggerated form of mental unsoundness, only attributable to the revivalism of a belief which has sprung up with fresh ardor, and is, alas, adding new victims to its community. Fanaticism and religious epidemics were formerly very prevalent in England, and a well recognized variety of mental epidemic termed demonomania existed to a large extent many years ago, but has died a natural death, the originators and upholders of its doctrines having passed off the scene, and the excitement having abated, but only to be followed by a new variety of insanity, termed 'spiritual mania.' The upholders of this form of fanaticism have indeed much to answer for. It is certainly a sufficient curse for a person to become insane from a circumstance which has a reality in existence, but it is a sad sight to see fellow-creatures absolutely driven mad from a belief in a form of mental excitement founded on a supposed creed which has no basis or foundation, and which admits of no analysis or investigation, for the media love the darkness because their deeds are evil."

May our hearts be drawn out to God in admiration of his wisdom and love in prohibiting our intercourse with Spiritualism. He only denies us what is hurtful. Blessed be his name, even for his laws that say, "Thou shalt not" do this and that.

BULGARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

The East was never laid so bare to the West as it is just now. We are being enlightened as to the state of religion, morality and social life, in those comparatively unknown parts, and a sorry spectacle is shown. The "Christianity" in that direction is Christianity but in name. To write a few facts will be to prove this statement. Take, for example, Bulgaria. The monks of the Greek church there are dreamy and unpractical anchorites, having wealth and power, but not godliness. One who knows them well says that they are "interested in their flock merely as a means of revenue, and care but little what may be their morality." As to the peasantry, they are slaves of the most palpable idolatry and superstition. If a man's fields suffer from drought, or some member of the family is ill, he calls in the village witch, who goes through incantations to the Evil Spirit for a change in the weather or for the recovery of the sick.

When a child is born, the witch brings a reaping-hook into the room, rubs the infant all over with salt, and fumigates the apartment to drive the devils from mother and child. The witch also ties a piece of garlic round the child's head to save it from evil eyes. As the child grows up, it is educated and accustomed to many a superstition. If his duty be to fetch water, he must spill some of it on the ground; if to purchase flour, he must burn incense under it. Bulgarian religion is the contrast of the Mosaic, as far as the use of water is concerned. It is sinful in Bulgaria to wash a child with water before he has attained his seventh year; indeed, all through life the cleansing of the whole body, whether of male or female, is regarded as a great sin. Except once, on the Friday before marriage, when the wife elect must take a complete bath.

The future inheritance, to the dark Bulgarian professor, is an unknown region; one having lately remarked, that "Heaven is a place where you are very comfortable, and feed on sugared cakes." At the death of one of these so-called christians, all the pots, kettles, and other utensils in the house are turned topsy turvy, to prevent the escaping soul taking up its residence in one of them, and from thence annoying the remaining portion of the family. There are a hundred superstitions equally heathenish as the foregoing, but I will not write them. Enough has been said to establish, that in that small portion of the map colored a pale tint to represent where the Great Name is known, there are spots as benighted as that much larger portion painted black to represent the night of heathen ignorance.

SCRAPS, PRINCIPALLY WITH REFERENCE TO ROME.

I see in a contemporary, that the promoters of a new church edifice, in applying to a bishop to have it "consecrated" under the name of "The Church of the Holy Cross," received from the bishop the very sensible reply, That he knew of no such thing as a holy cross, but only an accursed tree. The church was called by another name.

Rome, with her usual capability of lying, has lately claimed that Wycliff, in dying, recanted, and became a Romanist. Probably it was a "feeler." Had it not been contradicted, silence might have been construed into consent. So two Protestants have come forward proving the impossibility of its being so; since, says one (and he speaks as the other):—"It is an undisputed fact of English history that thirty years after his death, under the direction of the Council of Constance, the bones of 'the evil parson of Lutterworth' were exhumed, burned, and cast into the Swift, a tributary stream of the Avon. Hence the following lines—

'The Avon to the Severn runs,
The Severn to the sea;
And Wycliff's dust shall spread abroad
Wide as the waters be.'

The Papists would never have so dishonored the sleeping dust of the 'Morning Star of the Reformation,' had he in his last moments recanted and returned to the bosom of the 'Holy Roman Church.'"

The Rock (Church-of-England newspaper) of Nov. 17th, on page 887, in "Answers to Correspondents," replying to "Bible Student" says:—"We are unacquainted with any scriptural evidence tending to show that any portion of the dead—good or bad—do not now descend into hades." This is A, B, C knowledge with us; but such an admission as this from so high-standing a periodical should be made a note of for quotation to those who believe that the righteous ascend at death to heaven.

The speech of Bishop Strossmayer at the Ecumenical Council, held some six years ago in Rome, has just been translated from Italian into English. I send a copy herewith, and hope the Editor may see his way clear to print it. It is brimful of truth and courage.

A KEY TO THE MYSTERY.

I. C. WELLCOME.

It has always appeared very strange to the most of our real Bible students, that any of the brethren who make the Bible their study could seriously doubt that the wicked dead shall be raised from death to be punished, while the Scriptures declare so emphatically and so frequently that they will be. We think we have the key to this mystery.

It is known to our readers that several years ago we published a book written by myself and Eld. C. Goud, entitled "The Plan of Redemption," which has had an extensive circulation. In this book we brought out the Bible doctrine of the atonement, and the covenants which involve, beyond all successful dispute, the resurrection of all the race of man. This we did without regard to the doubts or reasonings of our doubting brethren on the subject.

The editors of the Herald of Life seemed to feel the force of the book, and reviewed it at great length in 1857, and, as they "believed," "thoroughly refuted it." But it continued to uproot their reasonings. Last winter the chapters on the atonement were published in a series of articles in the Crisis. This called out about seven columns in the Herald of Life by one of its editors in a second review. We did not know of this effort until several months had passed. On asking for the papers which contained this review, we obtained them in four numbers. In reading them we find what we call the key to the mystery of their views.

Our reviewer "presumes" the book "will strengthen those who have some faith in the view, but very much doubts if it makes any new converts." In this last doubt he is in great error. It has made quite a number of converts. Again, he says, "The idea that God proposes to raise the untold millions of the wicked dead to a brief but hopeless life of torment, and then kill them again, is bad." Here, then, he starts his reasoning with the Lord. It would be wrong, a "bad" act, for the Lord to bring bad men up from death to give them "the wages of sin." But as God is good and cannot commit a "bad" act, he will not raise the wicked. Who is judge? This reviewer, starting with this view, must vindicate the character of God, and parry off, and reason away every passage and element of Scripture which involves the Lord in this "bad" work of raising the wicked.

In this way he goes through the chapters of our book. It would be a great curiosity to any critical reader of our book to read this "review" of it. He misapprehends, misstates, or misapplies nearly every position he refers to in the book. This shows how such minds must look at and handle the Bible on this subject. Being judges of what the Lord ought not to do leads to a denial of all statements, or to a misapplying all statements conflicting with their judgment of right. But this review helps the sale of the book, and good will result from it.

TIMES OF THE GENTILES.

F. W. CLOUGH.

Jews and Gentiles,—names significant of two classes into which the human family were divided prior to the Christian era. Jews were those who were natural descendants from Abraham, and to whom afterwards in Moses' time were committed the "Oracles of God"; in which fact they occupied a more advantageous position than those denominated Gentiles, or outside nations. Rom. 3: 1, 2. Their natural connection amounted to no more than the Gentiles, so far as being any better by nature; for the test put upon them—the law—proved them only natural men, only "beloved for the Father's sake."

The question now arises, When did their advantage cease? We answer, At the first advent of Christ; i. e., during his ministry. In the original covenant that God made with Abraham there was this specification: "In thy seed [Christ] shall all the nations of the earth be blessed"; and that blessing began to come to the outside nations when they first began to hear the good news that God was the God of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, and that through faith in Christ they were accounted righteous. When Christ was sent he came to his own, confined his labors among them, but his own received him not; and after a brief ministry of about three and a half years they crucified him; "but God raised him from the dead," and, to chosen witnesses, he showed himself alive for forty days, when he led them as far as Bethany, and after commissioning them to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," he was received up into heaven, where he is now seated at the right hand of God. After eight days tarrying at Jerusalem according to direction, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon them, and they began to speak with other tongues; and, says the sacred historian, "There were dwelling at Jerusalem devout men out of every nation under heaven"; and this circumstance transpiring at a special occasion, to which there were gathered "Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, in Phrygia, and Pamphilia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God"; which resulted in an addition of three thousand persons to the church that day from the nationalities before mentioned. What does it mean? The times of the Gentiles were beginning; the period allotted to Jewish superiority or preference was ended,—the seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24.

Says the apostle, "In Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free; but ye are all one in him." Paul shows us plainly, in Romans 11, that the fall of the Jewish people had already taken place, and that the fulness of the Gentiles was already come in. The seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24 were allotted or determined upon them as a natural seed, which thing terminated in Christ, when the kingdom of God was taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

If God's kingdom, in its preparatory state, was taken from them and given to others, it certainly follows that the times of the Gentiles then began. To locate the commencement of Gentile times after the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70, is overlooking God's great plan of mercy through Jesus the Messiah, in whom every believing Jew or Gentile is reckoned a son of God, and every unbelieving Jew or Gentile is condemned for rejecting the same.

"He that believeth the Son of God hath eternal life; but he that believeth not the Son of God hath not life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The Jewish nation was condemned long before their city was destroyed. See Luke 19: 42-45. The execution of that sentence was stayed for a number of years, but when Christ the Lord passed condemnation upon them, that allotted to them was ended—the seventy weeks (Dan. 9: 24), when the middle wall of partition was broken down. Who will show us that God had his plan with Jews only?

When their priesthood was superceded by Christ, our high priest, made after the order of Melchizedec, we conclude that Jewish priests became usurpers, and their supposed offerings abominations. When God made an end of Jewish law, as we read, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth;" it certainly follows that their attempts to please God by the ritual law failed, and it was in this sense that their offerings ceased or failed in the midst of the week. God himself had made an offering available. O the depth of the love of God in Christ the Messiah, "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both Jew and Gentile."

Jewish times were before Christ was crucified, A. D. 33. The last time allotted to them was the seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24, which ended when Gentile times began, as we have already shown. Daniel would not be pleased to hear modern teachers call that wicked race his people after they had crucified Messiah the Prince. Gentile times end when Christ comes the second time to save the obedient of all ages. Daniel would have agreed with Paul, had he lived at the same time, relative to "thy people," that the term would have a new application after A. D. 33. "For he is not a Jew which is one outwardly. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly."

"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise;" and that which in other ages, Jewish times, was not made known to the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be, after A. D. 33, fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel. Eph. 3: 5-6.

DISTRESS OF NATIONS WITH PERPLEXITY.

The London tri-weekly Record, the principal journal of the Evangelical clergy of the Church of England, many of whom hold similar Second Advent views, speaks as follows in its leading article of Nov. 24:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and on the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for those things that are coming upon the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken (Luke 21: 16). Such is our Lord's description of the times which are immediately to precede the coming of the Son of man. This prophetic language indicates not merely literal disturbances in the order of nature, but also those political and ecclesiastical convulsions of which the natural disturbances are representative; convulsions in empires and their ruling dynasties, the upsetting of thrones and kingdoms, revolutions among nations, and the uproar and disturbances of wars, and signal calamities by sea and land, may likewise be included. The broad lesson is, that a period of great political changes, national disturbance, and material suffering will immediately precede the epoch of the consummation and the personal advent of Christ.

It is difficult, look where we will, not to recognize, in the present condition of Europe and of the world at large, these predicted indications of the Lord's second coming; and the first outbreak of the storm appears to be already upon us. The political atmosphere is so highly charged with electricity like the material atmosphere before a thunder-storm, that it is difficult to conceive the possibility of its passing away without mischief. The passionate expectation of war is eminently one of those things which tends to fulfil itself. Two nations, at all events, are marshalling their hosts with hot haste, and neither seems to be appalled at the prospect. The excitement in Russia has, to all appearance at least, carried the pacific Czar wholly along with it. The passions agitating Turkey cannot be supposed to be less vehement than those of Russia. In Austria the Magyar population is waxing hot against the Slavs. Germany and France look calmly on; but Italy acknowledges her deep interest in the questions at issue; and England looks somewhat doubtfully on, indignant at Turkey but suspicious of Russia, and in a mood very capable of being turned into open antagonism.

Amid all the circumstances which have brought us to this state of things, nothing has been so remarkable as the helplessness of human diplomacy. Again and again all sagacity has been in fault. Things have drifted on, in spite of the most resolute efforts, into an entanglement of interests which seem to have no solution possible, save by the bloody arbitrament of war. Everything has the appearance of moving on, sooner or later, to some great catastrophe. When the probability of English interests being virtually compromised is clearly recognized, and it is remembered that the future of the Holy Land and of the Jews must inevitably be affected by any events which involve the downfall of the Turkish Empire, it is difficult to avoid seeing in the present confusion and alarm the probable signs of the latter days, and the beginning of that predicted series of events of which the coming of the Lord in glory will be the highest climax. The consumption of Rome has begun, the waters of the Euphrates are being dried up, and the first notes of the last Apocalyptic trumpet seem already to vibrate upon the ear.—Christian Herald.

THE ONE WAY.

D. B. PEARSON.

There is one way and only one. Jesus Christ is the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

Then it is plain to be seen that if we are saved it must be in God's way and not man's. With men it is impossible, but with God all things are possible. All the men that have lived, are living, or shall live, cannot save a soul; yet, Christ by his sufferings and death could atone for the sins of the whole world. There can be no question but what God's way is best. If he does not know what is for the good of his children, who can tell him? Surely not fallen humanity. We cannot comprehend the ways of the Lord, nor is it necessary that we should, for we are to walk by faith, not by sight. It should be enough for us to know that Jesus is our leader; we cannot expect to see the way clear through to the kingdom, when perhaps we have but just started on the journey, but as long as we follow Jesus we can always see one step, and when that is taken, he will show us another, and we may rest assured that the Lord will clear the way as fast as we shall be able to walk in it.

Jesus did not say, I am a door but the door. And though there shall be twelve gates to the Holy City, Jesus is the only password by which we can gain admittance. How important it is that we walk in the way Jesus has marked out, "for he that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." Then, if we are unwilling to be led by the Lord in all things, but try to mark out the way, and have a desire to save ourselves, are we not ungrateful to God? Do we not, by so doing, try to rob the Holy One of God of the title of Savior? If we come to him in our sins he will save us, but if we could make ourselves good, become righteous by our own efforts, we should have no need of a Savior. The more we try in our own strength to make ourselves better, the worse we become, but when we have made our last effort and then feel that we are lost, it is then that the Savior throws around us his almighty arm, and brings us out of darkness into the glorious light of the gospel.

Wilmot, N. H.

HONEST WAYS OF LIVING.

There should be a return to more simple, more honest ways of living on the part of all. It should be deemed dishonorable to live beyond one's means; no man should be encouraged to spend a few feverish years in luxury at the risk of breaking down and making a dishonorable ending.

The age is thirsty for luxuries. The very paupers of our cities scorn the patched garments and simple fare which once satisfied the well to do; the young clerk must live in a house about as luxuriously furnished as his employer's; the servants rival their mistresses in the costliness and elaborateness of their attire; the young couple who begin a home must have it as richly decorated as that of those who have labored for years. In a word, there is an utter unwillingness on the part of too many to be content with simple surroundings.

We should learn to rate people at what they are and not what they have. This is a money worshipping age; men of vicious principles, through the clink of gold, summon hosts of admirers, others are tolerated for the baubles the mob scramble for; and still others are permitted to occupy posts of honor, even in religious societies, which they have bought with money. This is living in the fear of gold and not of God, and seeking the honor of man, and not simple rectitude toward man.—Christian Reformer.

GUILTY, OR NOT GUILTY.

She stood at the bar of justice,—
A creature wan and wild,—
In form too small for a woman,
In features too old for a child;
For a look so worn and pathetic
Was stamped on her pale young face,
It seemed long years of suffering
Must have left that silent trace.

"Your name," said the judge, as he eyed her
With kindly look, yet keen,
"Is?"—"Mary McGuire, if you please, sir."
"And your age?"—"I am turned fifteen."
"Well, Mary,"—and then from a paper
He slowly and gravely read—
"You are charged here—I'm sorry to say it—
With stealing three loaves of bread.

"You look not like an offender,
And I hope that you can show
The charge to be false. Now tell me,
Are you guilty of this or no?"
A passionate burst of weeping
Was at first her sole reply;
But she dried her tears in a moment
And looked in the judge's eye.

"I will tell you just how it was sir:
My father and mother are dead,
And my little brothers and sisters
Were hungry and asked me for bread.
At first I earned it for them
By working hard all day;
But somehow the times were bad, sir,
And the work all fell away.

"I could get no more employment;
The weather was bitter cold;
The young ones cried and shivered—
Little Jonnie's but four years old.
So what was I to do, sir?
I am guilty,—but do not condemn;
I took—oh! was it stealing?—
The bread to give to them.

Every man in the court room—
Gray beard and thoughtless youth—
Knew, as he looked upon her,
That the prisoner spoke the truth.
Out from their pockets came kerchiefs,
Out from their eyes sprung tears,
And out from their old faded wallets
Treasures hoarded for years.

The judge's face was a study—
The strangest you ever saw—
As he cleared his throat and murmured
Something about the law.
For one so learned in such matter—
So wise in dealing with men—
He seemed, on a simple question,
Sorely puzzled just then.

But no one blamed him or wondered
When at last these words were heard:
"The sentence of this young prisoner
Is for the present deferred."
And no one blamed him or wondered
When he went to her and smiled,
And tenderly led from the court room
Himself the "guilty" child.

"HELL FIRE."

J. P. MARQUAND.

In Matthew and in Mark this terrible expression is used a number of times. What does our Lord mean by it? We all know the meaning of the word hell. But hell fire, what is that? Let us examine it. In another place it is called unquenchable fire, in another everlasting fire, in another a furnace of fire, also it is called a lake of fire burning with brimstone; and then we are told what class of persons shall be put into it, the fearful, the unbelieving sorcerers, whoremongers, idolaters, the abominable, and all liars and hypocrites. Rev. 21: 8.

Fire will do its office work in purifying, destroying and burning everything up of a wicked or evil kind; in the language of the prophet, leaving neither root nor branch. Malachi 4: 1. It is very certain that the Bible speaks of a general conflagration, when everything that is evil shall be destroyed, and the earth will be purified and made white and clean once more; all sin and sinners will undergo this terrible ordeal, for God hath purposed to destroy all those who corrupt the earth.

God made this earth to be inhabited by man, and his plans will be carried out to the letter. A short work will the Lord have, and cut it short in righteousness. Rom. 9: 28, Isa. 28: 22. God does not design to send a flood of water upon the earth in order to destroy the wicked, but will permit the element of fire to do its strange work of consuming everything that is obnoxious and evil.

Our Lord Jesus knew what he was saying when he spoke of the coming judgment, and faithfully warned mankind to turn from their evil ways and seek the favor of God, their Maker. In that fearful day of adjudication and retribution, none will be able to stand but the elect of God, those who are pure and holy, wise and good, those who have loved God and righteousness, those who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before them in the gospel; who have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty and deceit, and have obtained pardon and peace for all their sins. Fellow sinner, how is it with you? Have you made your calling and election sure?

EACH of us bears within himself a world unknown to his fellow-beings, and each may relate of himself a history resembling that of every one, yet like that of no one.

BEAUTY OF HOLINESS, AND HOW THEY SAID IT.

H. PRATT.

When Jehoshaphat king of Israel learned that a great multitude of Moabites, and Ammonites were coming against him to battle, he was afraid, and set himself to seek the Lord. He confessed his inability to meet such an army successfully and that he did not know what to do.

He proclaimed a fast, and amid their griefs and fears, the Spirit of the Lord came upon Jahaziel, a real gift of the Spirit, and he told how happy he was, and what perfect peace he had found, and what a great blessing he had obtained from the Lord? No, the Spirit called forth prophetic utterances, "Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, thus saith the Lord to you; be not afraid or dismayed by reason of this great multitude, for the battle is not yours but God's. Ye shall not need to fight in battle; set yourselves, stand ye still and see the salvation of God with you. To-morrow go out against them, for the Lord will be with you." This turned their fasting and mourning into worship; and Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground, and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the Lord worshiping him.

I tell you, brethren, that was a good time, but they so far forgot themselves that they never uttered a single word about their feelings, but they sprang to their feet "and praised the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice on high." The morrow came, and they had not lost the blessing, they were all ready on the march for the enemy.

Jehoshaphat said, "Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem. Believe in the Lord, so shalt thou be established, believe his prophets so shalt thou prosper? 2 Chron. 20: 20. What a thrill of joy comes by believing God, and what praise and adoration it begets to believe his prophets.

The king now wanted to turn the meeting into a praise meeting, and being very meek he consulted the brethren about it, and finding no opposition he appointed singers to go before the army and to sing with great confidence. No; he appointed singers unto the Lord, and praisers that should praise the beauty of holiness, not the beauty of their holiness, as they went before the army and to aid, "Praise the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever." What had they done to cause all this cheer? What had they done to shout victory before the battle? The king touched the right key, he pulled out the right stop that caused that sweet music, "Believe God, so shalt thou be established, believe his prophets and so shalt thou prosper." This caused them "to praise God in the beauty of holiness," and this is the way they sung it. Then let us walk in the "old paths," wending our way along the path of prophetic vision, nearing the great battle that shall be "with burning and fuel of fire; let us go forth with burning lamps, believing God, believing his prophets, and to "praise the beauty of holiness." Amen.

NO ARMOR FOR THE BACK.

Wear no armor for your back when you have determined to follow the track of truth. Receive upon your breast-plate of righteousness the sword-cuts of your adversaries; the stern metal shall turn the edges of your foeman's weapon. Let the right be your lord paramount, and for the rest be free and your own master still. Follow the truth for her own sake; follow her in evil report; let not many waters quench your love to her. Yield to no established rulers if they involve a lie. Do not evil that good should come of it. Leave consequences to God, but do right. If friends fail thee, do the right. If foemen surround thee, do the right. Be genuine, real, sincere, true, upright, godlike.

The world's maxim is, trim your sails, and yield to circumstances. But if you would do any good in your generation, you must be made of sterner stuff, and help make your times rather than be made by them. You must not yield to customs, but like the anvil, endure all blows, until the hammers break themselves. When misrepresented, use no crooked means to clear yourself. Clouds do not last long. If in the course of duty you are tried by the distrust of friends, gird up your loins and say in your heart, I was not driven to virtue by the encouragement of friends, nor will I be repelled from it by their coldness.—Sel.

NEVER give up when engaged in any good work. God shines at all times, though to us it may be as above a cloud. The experience of every soul which has turned to God is that there is light somewhere, and that which is bright and clear. It is our fault if we see not that light which we shall always find in the path of duty, with faith as our guide.

NEGLECT of private duties is the great reason why the hearts of many are so dead and dull, so formal and carnal, so barren and unfruitful under public ordinances. Oh! that christians would lay this seriously to heart. Certainly that man's heart is best in public duties who is most frequent in private exercises.—Ex.

"LIFT UP THE LATCH AND ENTER IN."

'Twas dark, and I with inward fear
Stood like a culprit weeping near
The house in which my Savior dwelt;
Such pangs my heart had never felt.
A voice addressed me from within—
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

I thought I was unfit to be
A guest of such an one as He;
I needed garments new and fair,
Before I dared to enter there;
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

But in my deepest heart I knew
That I had sinned and basely too;
I trifled with his blood and tears,
I slighted him for months and years.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

But I would rather not comply
Until myself to mend I try;
I need a better heart before
I could be welcome at the door.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

"Not now," I said, "'twill do again
When I am free from all my pain;
No sighing ones are waiting there,
Where songs of gladness fill the air.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

With all my sin and guilt oppressed,
With heart of stone within my breast,
Say! would your Savior honored be
With such a worthless guest as me?
Yes, said the voice that spake within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

WM. KELLAWAY.

TIME BRINGS CHANGES.

The adage that I place this week as one of the sub-headings of my letter is a well-known truism. Time does indeed bring changes; sometimes for the better, but alas! it is not always so. The mutations of changing creatures are often cause of pain to other beings, their associates of by-gone days, with whom perhaps their fellowship was so intimate, that by a happy expression they may be said to have been but as a single soul.

Most of the readers of the Crisis will have heard of the Rev. H. H. Dobney, who wrote about thirty years ago on the truth of possible immortality; probably many of them will have read his book. At least, the older brethren of the van, who have long waged a good warfare, will know of his existence. That time, the Word of God dwelt in him, and he was satisfied with its holy utterances. Looking into the future, he saw light in God's light. Then, he kept what the Bible revealed with respect to destiny. But we live in a restless age. Ever new things arise to work unrest in the mind. Happy they who, when they come to a knowledge of the truth, become established in the same; only going on in the direction of increasing strength, gaining knowledge in the same line, and becoming more deeply persuaded as to the divine authorship of their belief.

The peculiar temptation of the age is to indulge in vague wishes, in indefinite and larger hopes than the Bible warrants. Mr. Dobney has at last gone in that direction. He thinks even for Judas there may be good in store. "Texts" he will not now be limited by; his "heart" leads him beyond them. In foolish generosity he thinks to be more generous than God as revealed in the Scriptures. Ah! that "heart" of man; would that it were known that it is "deceitful" as a guide! The old Protestant confession, that "The written Word of God is the sole rule of christian faith," as well as "godly practice," ought to be frequently remembered and pondered on. And no one may speak except "as the oracles of God." To "go beyond the word of the Lord,"—to nullify penalty with "promises of good," or even intimations that there may be good,—oh! what a sad, sad work. Mr. Edward White, in a letter to the Christian World, grieves over the departure of Mr. Dobney from his old position; and many readers of the Crisis will share in his grief. Brethren, pray for him; for he errs of a kindly disposition. It may be that our gracious God may grant him a returning to "the old path," even "the good way." Mr. Dobney says himself, if ever he changes it is God that must "disillusionize" him.

ADDITIONAL TESTIMONY THAT SPIRITUALISM IS INDUCIVE OF MADNESS.

In a former letter, I wrote that it was being said in England that Spiritualism was a fruitful source of maniacy in the United States. From facts which have been published since, it is confirmed that this newly-revived "ism" is really of a dementing nature. Twelve years ago Mr. Hibbert Newton, vicar of St. Michael's, Southwark, London, wrote a long letter on "Spiritism," which he concluded thus: "God has marked his sense of the sin by giving up thousands to what may almost be looked upon as a kind of demoniacal possession. They have gone to the mad-house. In Zurich alone, thirty-two of the 'consulters of the dead' were sent to the lunatic asylum (See Dibdin's lecture on table turning)." These words are transcribed from this old letter as re-published in the Rock. Dr. Forbes Winslow's letter, in which the United States is mentioned, is as follows:

"The consideration of Spiritualism having been brought before the public, I wish to testify to the pernicious effects on the mind by a belief in its groundless doctrines. It is a startling fact that over ten thousand persons of unsound mind are confined in the lunatic asylums of the United States, driven mad by over excitement caused by Spiritualism. Many of the auditors of the so-called media consist chiefly of weak-minded hysterical persons, who would believe anything they are told. Hearing imaginary voices, the so-called 'auricular delirium, so common in monomania, is one of their prominent symptoms. Insanity from this cause is now very prevalent in England, and is increasing day by day; persons in whom the delusion in spiritual-belief has for a time been dormant are now becoming the victims of an exaggerated form of mental unsoundness, only attributable to the revivalism of a belief which has sprung up with fresh ardor, and is, alas, adding new victims to its community. Fanaticism and religious epidemics were formerly very prevalent in England, and a well recognized variety of mental epidemic termed demonomania existed to a large extent many years ago, but has died a natural death, the originators and upholders of its doctrines having passed off the scene, and the excitement having abated, but only to be followed by a new variety of insanity, termed 'spiritual mania.' The upholders of this form of fanaticism have indeed much to answer for. It is certainly a sufficient curse for a person to become insane from a circumstance which has a reality in existence, but it is a sad sight to see fellow-creatures absolutely driven mad from a belief in a form of mental excitement founded on a supposed creed which has no basis or foundation, and which admits of no analysis or investigation, for the media love the darkness because their deeds are evil."

May our hearts be drawn out to God in admiration of his wisdom and love in prohibiting our intercourse with Spiritualism. He only denies us what is hurtful. Blessed be his name, even for his laws that say, "Thou shalt not" do this and that.

BULGARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

The East was never laid so bare to the West as it is just now. We are being enlightened as to the state of religion, morality and social life, in those comparatively unknown parts, and a sorry spectacle is shown. The "Christianity" in that direction is Christianity but in name. To write a few facts will be to prove this statement. Take, for example, Bulgaria. The monks of the Greek church there are dreamy and impractical anchorites, having wealth and power, but not godliness. One who knows them well says that they are "interested in their flock merely as a means of revenue, and care but little what may be their morality." As to the peasantry, they are slaves of the most palpable idolatry and superstition. If a man's fields suffer from drought, or some member of the family is ill, he calls in the village witch, who goes through incantations to the Evil Spirit for a change in the weather or for the recovery of the sick.

When a child is born, the witch brings a reaping-hook into the room, rubs the infant all over with salt, and fumigates the apartment to drive the devils from mother and child. The witch also ties a piece of garlic round the child's head to save it from evil eyes. As the child grows up, it is educated and accustomed to many a superstition. If his duty be to fetch water, he must spill some of it on the ground; if to purchase flour, he must burn incense under it. Bulgarian religion is the contrast of the Mosaic, as far as the use of water is concerned. It is sinful in Bulgaria to wash a child with water before he has attained his seventh year; indeed, all through life the cleansing of the whole body, whether of male or female, is regarded as a great sin. Except once, on the Friday before marriage, when the wife elect must take a complete bath.

The future inheritance, to the dark Bulgarian professor, is an unknown region; one having lately remarked, that "Heaven is a place where you are very comfortable, and feed on sugared cakes." At the death of one of these so-called christians, all the pots, kettles, and other utensils in the house are turned topsy turvy, to prevent the escaping soul taking up its residence in one of them, and from thence annoying the remaining portion of the family. There are a hundred superstitions equally heathenish as the foregoing, but I will not write them. Enough has been said to establish, that in that small portion of the map colored a pale tint to represent where the Great Name is known, there are spots as benighted as that much larger portion painted black to represent the night of heathen ignorance.

SCRAPS, PRINCIPALLY WITH REFERENCE TO ROME.

I see in a contemporary, that the promoters of a new church edifice, in applying to a bishop to have it "consecrated" under the name of "The Church of the Holy Cross," received from the bishop the very sensible reply, That he knew of no such thing as a holy cross, but only an accursed tree. The church was called by another name.

Rome, with her usual capability of lying, has lately claimed that Wycliff, in dying, recanted, and became a Romanist. Probably it was a "feeler." Had it not been contradicted, silence might have been construed into consent. So two Protestants have come forward proving the impossibility of its being so; since, says one (and he speaks as the other):—"It is an undisputed fact of English history that thirty years after his death, under the direction of the Council of Constance, the bones of 'the evil parson of Lutterworth' were exhumed, burned, and cast into the Swift, a tributary stream of the Avon. Hence the following lines—

'The Avon to the Severn runs,
The Severn to the sea;
And Wycliff's dust shall spread abroad
Wide as the waters be.'

The Papists would never have so dishonored the sleeping dust of the 'Morning Star of the Reformation,' had he in his last moments recanted and returned to the bosom of the 'Holy Roman Church.'"

The Rock (Church-of-England newspaper) of Nov. 17th, on page 887, in "Answers to Correspondents," replying to "Bible Student" says:—"We are unacquainted with any scriptural evidence tending to show that any portion of the dead—good or bad—do not now descend into hades." This is A, B, C knowledge with us; but such an admission as this from so high-standing a periodical should be made a note of for quotation to those who believe that the righteous ascend at death to heaven.

The speech of Bishop Strossmayer at the Ecumenical Council, held some six years ago in Rome, has just been translated from Italian into English. I send a copy herewith, and hope the Editor may see his way clear to print it. It is brimful of truth and courage.

10 Warwick Lane, London, England.

A KEY TO THE MYSTERY.

I. C. WELLCOME.

It has always appeared very strange to the most of our real Bible students, that any of the brethren who make the Bible their study could seriously doubt that the wicked dead shall be raised from death to be punished, while the Scriptures declare so emphatically and so frequently that they will be. We think we have the key to this mystery.

It is known to our readers that several years ago we published a book written by myself and Eld. C. Goud, entitled "The Plan of Redemption," which has had an extensive circulation. In this book we brought out the Bible doctrine of the atonement, and the covenants which involve, beyond all successful dispute, the resurrection of all the race of man. This we did without regard to the doubts or reasonings of our doubting brethren on the subject.

The editors of the Herald of Life seemed to feel the force of the book, and reviewed it at great length in 1857, and, as they "believed," "thoroughly refuted it." But it continued to uproot their reasonings. Last winter the chapters on the atonement were published in a series of articles in the Crisis. This called out about seven columns in the Herald of Life by one of its editors in a second review. We did not know of this effort until several months had passed. On asking for the papers which contained this review, we obtained them in four numbers. In reading them we find what we call the key to the mystery of their views.

Our reviewer "presumes" the book "will strengthen those who have some faith in the view, but very much doubts if it makes any new converts." In this last doubt he is in great error. It has made quite a number of converts. Again, he says, "The idea that God proposes to raise the untold millions of the wicked dead to a brief but hopeless life of torment, and then kill them again, is bad." Here, then, he starts his reasoning with the Lord. It would be wrong, a "bad" act, for the Lord to bring bad men up from death to give them "the wages of sin." But as God is good and cannot commit a "bad" act, he will not raise the wicked. Who is judge? This reviewer, starting with this view, must vindicate the character of God, and parry off, and reason away every passage and element of Scripture which involves the Lord in this "bad" work of raising the wicked.

In this way he goes through the chapters of our book. It would be a great curiosity to any critical reader of our book to read this "review" of it. He misapprehends, misstates, or misapplies nearly every position he refers to in the book. This shows how such minds must look at and handle the Bible on this subject. Being judges of what the Lord ought not to do leads to a denial of all statements, or to a misapplying all statements conflicting with their judgment of right. But this review helps the sale of the book, and good will result from it.

TIMES OF THE GENTILES.

F. W. CLOUGH.

Jews and Gentiles,—names significant of two classes into which the human family were divided prior to the Christian era. Jews were those who were natural descendants from Abraham, and to whom afterwards in Moses' time were committed the "Oracles of God"; in which fact they occupied a more advantageous position than those denominated Gentiles, or outside nations. Rom. 3: 1, 2. Their natural connection amounted to no more than the Gentiles, so far as being any better by nature; for the test put upon them—the law—proved them only natural men, only "beloved for the Father's sake."

The question now arises, When did their advantage cease? We answer, At the first advent of Christ; i. e., during his ministry. In the original covenant that God made with Abraham there was this specification: "In thy seed [Christ] shall all the nations of the earth be blessed;" and that blessing began to come to the outside nations when they first began to hear the good news that God was the God of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, and that through faith in Christ they were accounted righteous. When Christ was sent he came to his own, confined his labors among them, but his own received him not; and after a brief ministry of about three and a half years they crucified him; "but God raised him from the dead," and, to chosen witnesses, he showed himself alive for forty days, when he led them as far as Bethany, and after commissioning them to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," he was received up into heaven, where he is now seated at the right hand of God. After eight days tarrying at Jerusalem according to direction, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon them, and they began to speak with other tongues; and, says the sacred historian, "There were dwelling at Jerusalem devout men out of every nation under heaven"; and this circumstance transpiring at a special occasion, to which there were gathered "Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, in Phrygia, and Pamphilia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God"; which resulted in an addition of three thousand persons to the church that day from the nationalities before mentioned. What does it mean? The times of the Gentiles were beginning; the period allotted to Jewish superiority or preference was ended,—the seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24.

Says the apostle, "In Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free; but ye are all one in him." Paul shows us plainly, in Romans 11, that the fall of the Jewish people had already taken place, and that the fulness of the Gentiles was already come in. The seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24 were allotted or determined upon them as a natural seed, which thing terminated in Christ, when the kingdom of God was taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

If God's kingdom, in its preparatory state, was taken from them and given to others, it certainly follows that the times of the Gentiles then began. To locate the commencement of Gentile times after the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70, is overlooking God's great plan of mercy through Jesus the Messiah, in whom every believing Jew or Gentile is reckoned a son of God, and every unbelieving Jew or Gentile is condemned for rejecting the same.

"He that believeth the Son of God hath eternal life; but he that believeth not the Son of God hath not life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The Jewish nation was condemned long before their city was destroyed. See Luke 19: 42-45. The execution of that sentence was stayed for a number of years, but when Christ the Lord passed condemnation upon them, that allotted to them was ended—the seventy weeks (Dan. 9: 24), when the middle wall of partition was broken down. Who will show us that God had his plan with Jews only?

When their priesthood was superceded by Christ, our high priest, made after the order of Melchizedec, we conclude that Jewish priests became usurpers, and their supposed offerings abominations. When God made an end of Jewish law, as we read, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth," it certainly follows that their attempts to please God by the ritual law failed, and it was in this sense that their offerings ceased or failed in the midst of the week. God himself had made an offering available. O the depth of the love of God in Christ the Messiah, "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both Jew and Gentile."

Jewish times were before Christ was crucified, A. D. 33. The last time allotted to them was the seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24, which ended when Gentile times began, as we have already shown. Daniel would not be pleased to hear modern teachers call that wicked race his people after they had crucified Messiah the Prince. Gentile times end when Christ comes the second time to save the obedient of all ages. Daniel would have agreed with Paul, had he lived at the same time, relative to "thy people," that the term would have a new application after A. D. 33. "For he is not a Jew which is one outwardly. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly."

"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise;" and that which in other ages, Jewish times, was not made known to the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be, after A. D. 33, fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel. Eph. 3: 5-6.

DISTRESS OF NATIONS WITH PERPLEXITY.

The London tri-weekly Record, the principal journal of the Evangelical clergy of the Church of England, many of whom hold similar Second Advent views, speaks as follows in its leading article of Nov. 24:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and on the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for those things that are coming upon the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken (Luke 21: 16). Such is our Lord's description of the times which are immediately to precede the coming of the Son of man. This prophetic language indicates not merely literal disturbances in the order of nature, but also those political and ecclesiastical convulsions of which the natural disturbances are representative; convulsions in empires and their ruling dynasties, the upsetting of thrones and kingdoms, revolutions among nations, and the uproar and disturbances of wars, and signal calamities by sea and land, may likewise be included. The broad lesson is, that a period of great political changes, national disturbance, and material suffering will immediately precede the epoch of the consummation and the personal advent of Christ.

It is difficult, look where we will, not to recognize, in the present condition of Europe and of the world at large, these predicted indications of the Lord's second coming; and the first outbreak of the storm appears to be already upon us. The political atmosphere is so highly charged with electricity like the material atmosphere before a thunder-storm, that it is difficult to conceive the possibility of its passing away without mischief. The passionate expectation of war is eminently one of those things which tends to fulfil itself. Two nations, at all events, are marshalling their hosts with hot haste, and neither seems to be appalled at the prospect. The excitement in Russia has, to all appearance at least, carried the pacific Czar wholly along with it. The passions agitating Turkey cannot be supposed to be less vehement than those of Russia. In Austria the Magyar population is waxing hot against the Slavs. Germany and France look calmly on; but Italy acknowledges her deep interest in the questions at issue; and England looks somewhat doubtfully on, indignant at Turkey but suspicious of Russia, and in a mood very capable of being turned into open antagonism.

Amid all the circumstances which have brought us to this state of things, nothing has been so remarkable as the helplessness of human diplomacy. Again and again all sagacity has been in fault. Things have drifted on, in spite of the most resolute efforts, into an entanglement of interests which seem to have no solution possible, save by the bloody arbitrament of war. Everything has the appearance of moving on, sooner or later, to some great catastrophe. When the probability of English interests being virtually compromised is clearly recognized, and it is remembered that the future of the Holy Land and of the Jews must inevitably be affected by any events which involve the downfall of the Turkish Empire, it is difficult to avoid seeing in the present confusion and alarm the probable signs of the latter days, and the beginning of that predicted series of events of which the coming of the Lord in glory will be the highest climax. The consumption of Rome has begun, the waters of the Euphrates are being dried up, and the first notes of the last Apocalyptic trumpet seem already to vibrate upon the ear.—Christian Herald.

THE ONE WAY.

D. B. PEARSON.

There is one way and only one. Jesus Christ is the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

Then it is plain to be seen that if we are saved it must be in God's way and not man's. With men it is impossible, but with God all things are possible. All the men that have lived, are living, or shall live, cannot save a soul; yet, Christ by his sufferings and death could atone for the sins of the whole world. There can be no question but what God's way is best. If he does not know what is for the good of his children, who can tell him? Surely not fallen humanity. We cannot comprehend the ways of the Lord, nor is it necessary that we should, for we are to walk by faith, not by sight. It should be enough for us to know that Jesus is our leader; we cannot expect to see the way clear through to the kingdom, when perhaps we have but just started on the journey, but as long as we follow Jesus we can always see one step, and when that is taken, he will show us another, and we may rest assured that the Lord will clear the way as fast as we shall be able to walk in it.

Jesus did not say, I am a door but the door. And though there shall be twelve gates to the Holy City, Jesus is the only password by which we can gain admittance. How important it is that we walk in the way Jesus has marked out, "for he that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." Then, if we are unwilling to be led by the Lord in all things, but try to mark out the way, and have a desire to save ourselves, are we not ungrateful to God? Do we not, by so doing, try to rob the Holy One of God of the title of Savior? If we come to him in our sins he will save us, but if we could make ourselves good, become righteous by our own efforts, we should have no need of a Savior. The more we try in our own strength to make ourselves better, the worse we become, but when we have made our last effort and then feel that we are lost, it is then that the Savior throws around us his almighty arm, and brings us out of darkness into the glorious light of the gospel.

Wilmot, N. H.

HONEST WAYS OF LIVING.

There should be a return to more simple, more honest ways of living on the part of all. It should be deemed dishonorable to live beyond one's means; no man should be encouraged to spend a few feverish years in luxury at the risk of breaking down and making a dishonorable ending.

The age is thirsty for luxuries. The very paupers of our cities scorn the patched garments and simple fare which once satisfied the well to do; the young clerk must live in a house about as luxuriously furnished as his employer's; the servants rival their mistresses in the costliness and elaborateness of their attire; the young couple who begin a home must have it as richly decorated as that of those who have labored for years. In a word, there is an utter unwillingness on the part of too many to be content with simple surroundings.

We should learn to rate people at what they are and not what they have. This is a money worshipping age; men of vicious principles, through the clink of gold, summon hosts of admirers, others are tolerated for the baubles the mob scramble for; and still others are permitted to occupy posts of honor, even in religious societies, which they have bought with money. This is living in the fear of gold and not of God, and seeking the honor of man, and not simple rectitude toward man.—Christian Reformer.

GUILTY, OR NOT GUILTY.

She stood at the bar of justice,—
A creature wan and wild,—
In form too small for a woman,
In features too old for a child;
For a look so worn and pathetic
Was stamped on her pale young face,
It seemed long years of suffering
Must have left that silent trace.

"Your name," said the judge, as he eyed her
With kindly look, yet keen,
"Is?"—"Mary McGuire, if you please, sir."
"And your age?"—"I am turned fifteen."
"Well, Mary,"—and then from a paper
He slowly and gravely read—
"You are charged here—I'm sorry to say it—
With stealing three loaves of bread.

"You look not like an offender,
And I hope that you can show
The charge to be false. Now tell me,
Are you guilty of this or no?"
A passionate burst of weeping
Was at first her sole reply;
But she dried her tears in a moment
And looked in the judge's eye.

"I will tell you just how it was sir:
My father and mother are dead,
And my little brothers and sisters
Were hungry and asked me for bread.
At first I earned it for them
By working hard all day;
But somehow the times were bad, sir,
And the work all fell away.

"I could get no more employment;
The weather was bitter cold;
The young ones cried and shivered—
Little Jonnie's but four years old.
So what was I to do, sir?
I am guilty,—but do not condemn;
I took—oh! was it stealing?—
The bread to give to them.

Every man in the court room—
Gray beard and thoughtless youth—
Knew, as he looked upon her,
That the prisoner spoke the truth.
Out from their pockets came kerchiefs,
Out from their eyes sprung tears,
And out from their old faded wallets
Treasures hoarded for years.

The judge's face was a study—
The strangest you ever saw—
As he cleared his throat and murmured
Something about the law.
For one so learned in such matter—
So wise in dealing with men—
He seemed, on a simple question,
Sorely puzzled just then.

But no one blamed him or wondered
When at last these words were heard:
"The sentence of this young prisoner
Is for the present deferred."
And no one blamed him or wondered
When he went to her and smiled,
And tenderly led from the court room
Himself the "guilty" child.

"HELL FIRE."

J. P. MARQUAND.

In Matthew and in Mark this terrible expression is used a number of times. What does our Lord mean by it? We all know the meaning of the word hell. But hell fire, what is that? Let us examine it. In another place it is called unquenchable fire, in another everlasting fire, in another a furnace of fire, also it is called a lake of fire burning with brimstone; and then we are told what class of persons shall be put into it, the fearful, the unbelieving sorcerers, whoremongers, idolaters, the abominable, and all liars and hypocrites. Rev. 21: 8.

Fire will do its office work in purifying, destroying and burning everything up of a wicked or evil kind; in the language of the prophet, leaving neither root nor branch. Malachi 4: 1. It is very certain that the Bible speaks of a general conflagration, when everything that is evil shall be destroyed, and the earth will be purified and made white and clean once more; all sin and sinners will undergo this terrible ordeal, for God hath purposed to destroy all those who corrupt the earth.

God made this earth to be inhabited by man, and his plans will be carried out to the letter. A short work will the Lord have, and cut it short in righteousness. Rom. 9: 28, Isa. 28: 22. God does not design to send a flood of water upon the earth in order to destroy the wicked, but will permit the element of fire to do its strange work of consuming everything that is obnoxious and evil.

Our Lord Jesus knew what he was saying when he spoke of the coming judgment, and faithfully warned mankind to turn from their evil ways and seek the favor of God, their Maker. In that fearful day of adjudication and retribution, none will be able to stand but the elect of God, those who are pure and holy, wise and good, those who have loved God and righteousness, those who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before them in the gospel; who have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty and deceit, and have obtained pardon and peace for all their sins. Fellow sinner, how is it with you? Have you made your calling and election sure?

EACH of us bears within himself a world unknown to his fellow-beings, and each may relate of himself a history resembling that of every one, yet like that of no one.

BEAUTY OF HOLINESS, AND HOW THEY SAID IT.

H. PRATT.

When Jehoshaphat king of Israel learned that a great multitude of Moabites, and Ammonites were coming against him to battle, he was afraid, and set himself to seek the Lord. He confessed his inability to meet such an army successfully and that he did not know what to do.

He proclaimed a fast, and amid their griefs and fears, the Spirit of the Lord came upon Jahaziel, a real gift of the Spirit, and he told how happy he was, and what perfect peace he had found, and what a great blessing he had obtained from the Lord? No, the Spirit called forth prophetic utterances, "Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, thus saith the Lord to you; be not afraid or dismayed by reason of this great multitude, for the battle is not yours but God's. Ye shall not need to fight in battle; set yourselves, stand ye still and see the salvation of God with you. To-morrow go out against them, for the Lord will be with you." This turned their fasting and mourning into worship; and Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground, and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the Lord worshiping him.

I tell you, brethren, that was a good time, but they so far forgot themselves that they never uttered a single word about their feelings, but they sprang to their feet "and praised the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice on high." The morrow came, and they had not lost the blessing, they were all ready on the march for the enemy.

Jehoshaphat said, "Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem. Believe in the Lord, so shalt thou be established, believe his prophets so shalt thou prosper? 2 Chron. 20: 20. What a thrill of joy comes by believing God, and what praise and adoration it begets to believe his prophets.

The king now wanted to turn the meeting into a praise meeting, and being very meek he consulted the brethren about it, and finding no opposition he appointed singers to go before the army and to sing with great confidence. No; he appointed singers unto the Lord, and praisers that should praise the beauty of holiness, not the beauty of their holiness, as they went before the army and to aid, "Praise the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever." What had they done to cause all this cheer? What had they done to shout victory before the battle? The king touched the right key, he pulled out the right stop that caused that sweet music, "Believe God, so shalt thou be established, believe his prophets and so shalt thou prosper." This caused them "to praise God in the beauty of holiness," and this is the way they sung it. Then let us walk in the "old paths," wending our way along the path of prophetic vision, nearing the great battle that shall be "with burning and fuel of fire; let us go forth with burning lamps, believing God, believing his prophets, and to "praise the beauty of holiness." Amen.

NO ARMOR FOR THE BACK.

Wear no armor for your back when you have determined to follow the track of truth. Receive upon your breast-plate of righteousness the sword-cuts of your adversaries; the stern metal shall turn the edges of your foeman's weapon. Let the right be your lord paramount, and for the rest be free and your own master still. Follow the truth for her own sake; follow her in evil report; let not many waters quench your love to her. Yield to no established rulers if they involve a lie. Do not evil that good should come of it. Leave consequences to God, but do right. If friends fail thee, do the right. If foemen surround thee, do the right. Be genuine, real, sincere, true, upright, godlike.

The world's maxim is, trim your sails, and yield to circumstances. But if you would do any good in your generation, you must be made of sterner stuff, and help make your times rather than be made by them. You must not yield to customs, but like the anvil, endure all blows, until the hammers break themselves. When misrepresented, use no crooked means to clear yourself. Clouds do not last long. If in the course of duty you are tried by the distrust of friends, gird up your loins and say in your heart, I was not driven to virtue by the encouragement of friends, nor will I be repelled from it by their coldness.—Sel.

NEVER give up when engaged in any good work. God shines at all times, though to us it may be as above a cloud. The experience of every soul which has turned to God is that there is light somewhere, and that which is bright and clear. It is our fault if we see not that light which we shall always find in the path of duty, with faith as our guide.

NEGLECT of private duties is the great reason why the hearts of many are so dead and dull, so formal and carnal, so barren and unfruitful under public ordinances. Oh! that christians would lay this seriously to heart. Certainly that man's heart is best in public duties who is most frequent in private exercises.—Ex.
